Lure medics into bush: report

Doctors who aren't needed in areas of B.C. that have good medical services should be cut off from the government medicare plan, says a provincial government report released Friday.

The report on medical manpower says the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons, the profession's governing body, should limit the number of doctors practising in certain regions of the province.

The report also says the number of students permitted to enter the University of B.C. medical school should not be increased but there should be a recruiting drive to get doctors into isolated areas.

The college should license only as many physicians as a region needs to deter doctors from practising in areas which are already well served, says the report by Wesley Black, a former Social Credit health minister.

Although doctors would not be banned from practising in well-served areas, physicians who are not licensed for those areas by the college would not be permitted to bill the governent medical services plan for their work, the report recommends.

"Patients would be notified in writing that the physician was practising outside the plan, and they would be billed directly and not reimbursed by MSP (Medical Services Plan) for services received."

The report also suggests the government offer grants, clinics and low-cost housing to lure doctors to isolated communities, and advertise outside the country to relieve the acute shortage of psychiatrists in most parts of the province.

It suggests the province pay up to one-half the cost of housing and medical facilities, excluding land.

"The provisions of these (clinical) facilities would then eliminate the need for a large immediate cash outlay by the physician in establishing his practice and eliminate the problem of substantial loss on resale because the facilities would belong to the community."

Grants of $25,000 should be given to each physician who agrees to sign a three-year contract with the province to provide full-time medical services in a designated area, says the report.

The tax-exempt grant would be $15,000 in the first year and $5,000 in each of the remaining two years.

The report recommends a recruiting drive, higher salaries and an easing of entry requirements into Canada.

Enrolment at the UBC medical school should not be expanded "unless further increases are supported by needs forecast by medical manpower studies, considering both provincial and national needs."

Black says that without the introduction of these recommendations, the uneven distribution of physicians will worsen while the supply of physicians relative to the population will continue to increase.

Health Minister Rafe Mair said although he was not impressed with the report and felt Black overstepped the guidelines set down for the study, he is giving serious consideration to the recommendations.

The report was commissioned in April, 1978 and has been in the government's hands since March.

Guns open ceasefire

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Gunmen blasted the former home of Rhodesian guerrilla leader Robert Mugabe today and injured two of his relatives, police said.

They said three Africans sped past the house in the black township of Highfields, sprayed it with bullets from automatic weapons and lobbed a grenade that failed to explode.

Police on the scene said the weapons used in the attack were made in Eastern Europe. The grenade was stamped with Russian cyrillic letters.

The attack occurred as the cease-fire agreement ending seven years of bitter bush warfare began, with Rhodesia's rival political factions making preparations for nationwide political rallies and celebrations.

British Governor Lord Soames Friday legalized the two wings of the Patriotic Front guerillas shortly after they signed the truce agreement in London.

He also enacted a general amnesty for all those involved in the war, although he left in force the martial law regulations that cover 95 percent of the countryside.

The end of the war came on the seventh anniversary of the start of the fighting that has claimed almost 30,000 lives and turned another 150,000 people into refugees.

In a nationwide broadcast, Soames urged the population to forget about the hatreds of the past and to look forward to the future and independence elections.

"There will be fair play for everyone who is prepared to abide by the cease-fire agreement," he said.

As a sign of good faith, he announced that most of the estimated 70 political prisoners still in jail have been released and that trials by the the martial law courts, which condemned many captured guerrillas to death, have been suspended.

Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the leader of the Salisbury delegation to the London talks, was expected to trigger the campaign on his return to Rhodesia this afternoon.

Local representatives of the Patriotic Front also said they had political plans for the weekend.

They said one of their first priorities would be to reopen the political offices of their parties, closed since they were officially banned from all political activity a year ago.

But even as the truce was being signed in London, reports said troops and police in Rhodesia's southwest were still combing the bush for guerrillas as though the peace agreement had not been signed.

Under the truce agreement, these forces will slowly be withdrawn to their bases to allow the guerrilla leaders to inform their men that the fighting has finished and advise them where to report for transportation to 16 assembly points set up for them around the country.

28% in Quebec undecided: poll

MONREAL (CP) — If the Quebec government held its referendum now asking for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada, 41 per cent of Quebecers would vote yes and 31 per cent would vote no, a poll released Friday indicates.

However, the poll, prepared for Radio-Canada, the French-language network of the CBC, shows that the number of undecided voters has increased significantly since a similar poll was taken last February — to 28 per cent from 18 per cent.

Despite the poll's findings on the referendum question, it also shows that if a provincial election were held now, only 28 per cent of the respondents would vote for the PQ, compared with 35 per cent who would vote for the Quebec Liberals. A full 33 per cent said they were undecided or refused to answer.

The latest poll, based on random telephone interviews with 928 people across Quebec, was conducted between Nov. 23 and Dec. 3, before the Quebec government's announcement of the referendum question and the defeat of the Clark government.

The maximum margin of error is three per cent, says the Centre de Recherche sur l'Opinion Publique, which conducted the poll.

However, the poll also shows that 61 per cent of the respondents believe the government will lose the referendum, an increase from the 51 per cent of respondents who said they thought the government would lose in the poll last February.

And 39 per cent of respondents said they would vote no in a referendum that asked the question: "Are you for sovereignty-association," compared with 23 per cent who said they would vote yes. Thirty-eight per cent said were undecided.

The poll also shows that if the government wins a referendum asking for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association — and if the talks with Ottawa are successful — 65 per cent of respondents said the government should then "consult" the population.

Christmas truce on vote trail

Canadian Press

What amounts to a political truce has been declared until the New Year.

Joe Clark, Pierre Trudeau and Ed Broadbent came home for Christmas Friday after exchanging the first blows of the Feb. 18 election campaign.

For the most part, the time between now and the first week of the New Year will be devoid of political activity as the leaders of Canada's three major political parties enjoy the holiday season with their families.

The ho-ho-ho of Christmas has turned into a bit of humbug for Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy.

Mrs. McCarthy spent $4,000 of public money on Christmas greetings for her staff, but some workers consider it a waste of money and wish she had put social services on her gift list instead.

The ministry's 5,000 employees received personally-addressed envelopes containing a card from Mrs. McCarthy and two placemat-sized color reproductions of paintings.

The prints, group portraits of children of every race, were commissioned by the ministry to depict the Year of The Child and the Family. Each Christmas greeting cost the taxpayer 82 cents.

The envelopes also contained two-page letters congratulating the ministry staff for a job well done during 1979 and an outline of goals for the coming decade.

"It seems like an awful waste of money," said a social worker at one human resources office.

"We figure we're always short of money when it comes to staff and resources, and here she is spending money on bits of expensive paper," said the worker, who did not want to be identified.

In Victoria, Mrs. McCarthy defended the gifts as a well-earned token of her thanks to hard-working employees who have done an excellent job.

"If there are a few people (on staff) who feel the 82 cents it cost to send a card is wasted, they can always give that money to their favorite charity," she said.

Arabs on the eve of renaissance

By DR. RAPHAEL PATAI

Following is the third and final article in a series on the seemingly incomprehensible events in Iran and the Arab world. Dr. Patai is the author of The Arab Mind and numerous other books.

We do not as yet have the historical perspective from which we could evaluate the transformation taking place before our very eyes in the Arab world as a result of the outflow of oil and the inflow of riches.

Nor has the time yet come to give an appraisal of the change in the global position of the Arab states which is being brought about by the financial, industrial and military power they have been acquiring and massing in the last seven years.

However, a few facts and trends already are clear enough, and they indicate that the Arab world stands on the threshold of what can only be described as a Second Arab Renaissance.

The First Arab Renaissance, or, more precisely, naissance, was ushered in by Mohammed (570-832), the Arabian prophet, whose teachings, based largely on Jewish and Christian doctrines, gave the impetus to the Arabs to break out of their isolation in the Arabian Peninsula. Inspired by the Moslem religion, they embarked upon a phenomenal series of conquests which, in less than a century after the prophet's death, carved out for them an empire which dwarfed those of Alexander the Great and Imperial Rome.

The many nations they conquered and converted to Islam with the sword became wholly or partially Arabicized and, before long, participated in the creation of a high Arab culture which for centuries was far in advance of anything produced by Christian Europe. Until the European Renaissance, the Arabs had some justification in looking down upon the rest of mankind as they knew it, and considering it ignorant and barbarian.

The decline of the Arabs which set in during the 14th Century has been attributed variously to the Mongol invasions, the Black Death which swept twice over the Moslem countries, and the discovery of the sea route between Europe and the Far East around the South African Cape, which greatly reduced the importance and profitability of the trans-Arabian caravan trade.

At the same time, there was a drying up of the creative and adventurous spirit which had characterized Arab society in the preceding centuries, so that, once the Ottoman Turks extended their rule over the Arab lands in the early 16th Century, the Arab world sank into a state of stagnation. There followed almost four centuries during which the Arabs were shackled by torpor and rigid conservatism, while Europe forged ahead.

By the end of the 18th Century, Europe was ready to tackle its old enemy, the Ottoman Empire, not directly as yet, but by striking at its outlying Arab possessions.

The penetration of Europe into the Arab East is an oft-told tale which need not be

Iran confidently braced against UN embargo

TEHRAN (CP) — Iran's revolutionary leaders indicate they are confident the country can withstand any embargo the United Nations might impose as a result of President Carter's call for limited trade sanctions to help free the 50 American hostages behind held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

In apparent anticipation of Carter's move, Iranian leader Ayatollah Khomeini told revolutionary guards at his headquarters in Qom a few hours before the White House announcement Friday that Iran would ask other countries to defy such a ban and "meet our economic requirements."

In Washington, President Carter called the hostage incident "arrogant defiance" of international law in demanding the UN take concrete action to gain the release of the hostages.

"The world community must support the legal machinery it has established so that the United Nations and the International Court of Justice will continue to be relevant in settling serious disputes," he said.

Carter coupled his demand for limited sanctions, those that would not block oil exports or food or medicine imports by Iran, with a warning that "other remedies are available to us."

In the past, U.S. officials have indicated the other remedies include military action. And, on Friday, the Pentagon announced that the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Nimitz, accompanied by two cruisers, would head for the Arabian sea next week.

Meanwhile, Khomeini on Friday cleared the way for Christian clergymen to go to the embassy so the hostages can "celebrate Christmas in peace."

In accordance with his view of blacks as oppressed people in the U.S., Khomeini said black clergymen should have priority because of their "special stand against the crimes of America."

In other developments:

— Pope John Paul today issued his strongest statement yet on the hostage incident, condemning it as a violation of "the unquestionable international law."

— The U.S. Export-Import Bank today declared in default more than $245 million to finance U.S. exports to Iran. The action by the U.S. export-assistance bank will have three effects, a spokesman said: It will shut off further U.S. export credit to Iran; put the U.S. in a position to attach Iranian assets, previously frozen in the U.S., to cover the loans; and, because it puts the United States on record concerning export credits, it will allow the country to urge similar banks around the world to take parallel action.

— Donald McHenry, U.S. ambassaor to the UN, began talks Friday with other UN Security Council members about imposing sanctions.

— The Iran militants said they welcomed the demonstrations against the presence of the deposed Shah in Panama and called on Panamanians to continue their struggle "until the total destruction of America."

— In Kurdistan, where guerrillas fought government forces until a ceasefire last month, Kurdish spiritual leader Sheikh Ezzedin Hosseini said negotiators seeking autonomy had rejected government projects for self-management. However, he said he still hoped a peaceful solution could be found.

— In Tokyo, banking sources said today that Iran's central bank has told the London branches of Japanese banks to transfer all Iranian yen deposits to Tokyo and all dollar deposits to Paris. They said Iranian official believe the assets are less likely to be seized in Japan and France than Britain.

Rehire skipper appeal set

The B.C. Ferries Corp. will appeal an arbitration board's order to reinstate relief ferry skipper Gerry Stalling, dismissed 14 months ago after his ferry rammed a dock near Powell River.

Charles Gallagher, general manager of the corporation, said in an interview Friday the appeal will be filed in B.C. Court of Appeals early in the new year.

Gallagher said the corporation doesn't agree with the board's finding that the onus rests with the corporation to demonstrate or disprove there was a mechanical malfunction on the ferry prior to the mishap.

John Brewin, counsel for the ferry worker's union representing Stalling at the arbitration hearing argued the mishap was caused by a mechanical malfunction and because of that Stalling was blameless.

Gallagher said until the appeal is heard, Stalling will receive full pay in compliance with the board's ruling handed down in mid-November. But no duties will be assigned him until then.

Stalling was put back on the payroll on Dec. 1, a day after the corporation received a copy of the ruling.

However, notice of reinstatement didn't reach Stalling until Thursday after he had complained publicly he still hadn't received any pay.

Gallagher said the union had been notified on Dec. 12 but assumed that because of other matters currently before the union, officials hadn't got around to telling Stalling.

A cheque was delivered by special courier to his home near Nanaimo on Friday.

Gallagher said the extra effort was made because the computerized payroll-system would not have issued Stalling's first two-week cheque until after Christmas.

Gallagher said negotiations will begin soon to work out Stalling's back pay which could be as high as $30,000.

The board ruled he was entitled to compensation for loss of wages occasioned by his dismissal. It retained jurisdiction to fix the amount in the event the union and corporation can't agree.

Seven injured in collision

MACKENZIE (CP) — Seven persons were injured — including both drivers — when a Greyhound bus and a tractor trailer unit collided Friday night on Highway 39 about 25 kilometres south of here.

None of the injuries were serious. The injured were taken to hospital here.

The fully-loaded bus was en route to Prince George from Mackenzie when the accident occurred on a road police described as treacherous because of black ice and compact snow.

Chimney standards for B.C.

National safety standards for factory-built chimneys are not strict enough, so the provincial government will introduce tough new standards under its building code, Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Friday.

The minister said the government is extremely concerned about possible hazards associated with the chimneys.

The provincial fire commissioner withdrew his approval of class-A insulated metal chimneys for a few days earlier this month, saying they pose a serious fire hazard when used on stoves or fireplaces that burn solid fuels like coal or wood.

Vander Zalm said a provincial authority will be established to list approved brands of the chimneys.

He said the province's actions are only a temporary measure until stricter national standards are introduced.

BCR blames accidents on workers

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Railway manager blamed rail workers' carelessness for a "deplorable" accident rate on the government-owned line as a strike went into its fourth day Friday.

Al Shannon, operations and maintenance manager, said the Council of Railway Unions, representing 2,200 striking employees, has raised the issue of safety in the dispute "just to provide another hurdle for everybody to try to jump over."

Union negotiators, who have rejected company efforts to have crews on most trains reduced by eliminating a second brakeman, have said steep gradients and turns in the mountainous B.C. terrain make it necessary for the current crew sizes to be maintained.

The company says both Canadian National Railways and CP Rail have agreements with the United Transportation Union — which also represents B.C. Rail trainmen — allowing the reduction of crews.

Shannon said there was no relationship between safety and the bid to reduce crews. The high accident rate was not caused by terrain, grade or curves, he added.

"It's caused mostly by carelessness and human failures on the part of the workmen," Shannon said.

He said the company has tried to reduce accidents by stepping up safety talks with the unions and by using radar guns to check speeding.

The rail unions suggested when the walkout began that the company's accident rate over the last 12 months is worse than it has been over the last 25 years. A crew reduction would worsen the situation, they say.

The proposed crew reduction is one of the major blockages to a settlement. Other issues in the dispute are retroactivity of pay, wages and about 120 other clauses. The workers began a full-scale walkout Tuesday night.

The strike has halted some shipments of grain, lumber, coal, potash and sulphur from Northern B.C. and the Prairies.

New service for north coast

VANCOUVER (CP) — A new company, Pacific Rim Steamship Lines, said Friday it plans to take over freight and passenger service along British Columbia's north coast.

The announcement came only a few days after CP Rail said it was abandoning its coastal barge, tug and truck service because of excessive costs.

A Pacific Rim spokesman said its new service from the Vancouver area to Prince Rupert should begin in March. A combined passenger and freight vessel will stop at most of the ports formerly serviced by Northland Navigation Co.

Pacific Rim hopes to have a second vessel in service by June, the spokesman said. The company initially will provide employment for 74 people, with total employment of more than 100 expected by June.

Meanwhile, the United Steelworkers of America, Local 6611, is demanding the government force CP Rail to continue its service until another operator is available, with no layoffs or disruption of services.

Cancellation of the service Jan. 31 will cost all 20 members of the Kitimat local their jobs and another 65 employees would have to be laid off or relocated in Vancouver.

Help for seaman not in time

An unidentified seaman died Friday on his ship about 55 kilometres off Tofino on the west coast of Vancouver Island minutes before a rescue helicopter arrived to take him to hospital.

The seaman was believed to have suffered a heart attack on board the Thailand freighter Chaivaree.

Sentence later on arson counts

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A 34-year-old unemployed man pleaded guilty Friday in provincial court to 27 counts of arson-related offences which caused an estimated $800,000 in damages last summer.

Kuno Hubert Macharski will be sentenced Jan. 11 for offences committed between July 21 and August 24.

Man charged in two deaths

POWELL RIVER (CP) — A 43-year-old man has been charged in connection with the deaths of two elderly women in this community.

Donald Walter Bleaney of Powell River was charged Friday by police with first-degree murder in connection with the 1977 beating death of Emma Jane Boserup, 73.

Earlier this week he was charged with second-degree murder in the death of Lily Lauridsen, 67, who was found dead near her home Sunday.

Vancouver's very own Grinch

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver has a Christmas grinch of its own, who chopped down a Christmas tree used by paraplegics to raise funds for the needy.

The six-foot fir, planted in the front lawn of the Canadian Paraplegic Association's office, was being used in the association's annual "light-a-light" campaign.

With every $1-donation to the group's Christmas fund, another light went on the tree.

Thursday night there were 88 lights decorating the tree, a good start towards the association's goal of $200 for the purchase of automobile hand control devices.

Friday morning rehabilitation worker Stan Stronge arrived at the office to discover all that remained of the tree was an ankle-high stump.

Santa had some helpers

MACKENZIE (CP) — Residents in two isolated British Columbia communities were treated to an early visit by Santa Claus Wednesday courtesy of the RCMP.

Mackenzie RCMP had a patrol scheduled in Fort Ware and Ingenika, two Indian villages on Williston Lake about 425 kilometres northwest of Prince George, so they decided to take St. Nick with them.

"Local merchants donated items for goodie bags for the 200 children in the villages," said Sgt. Jim Aird.

Former Delta mayor must pay

VANCOUVER (CP) — Former Delta mayor Tom Goode will have to pay $900 a month to a bankruptcy trustee, starting Jan. 1, a B.C. Supreme Court judge ruled Friday.

Goode declared bankruptcy in January this year, claiming debts of $3 million and assets of about $2 million.

Mr. Justice Locke said that Goode's income to the end of November this year was approximately $32,000 and that he was also entitled to a real estate commission of $16,500 which was being withheld.

BRICing Petrocan

Encouraging equity investment by Canadians in Petrocan is a very conservative thing to do, and for Canada's Tory prime minister to propose such a scheme is a wise alternative to his campaign promise of a year ago.

If the British Columbia government had patented the formula for giving away and selling shares in crown corporations, it might have made millions selling the copyright. The plan outlined by Joe Clark in Vancouver draws on what happened when shares in the British Columbia Resoures Investment Corporation were distributed.

The BRICing of Petrocan calls for five free shares to be given to every Canadian 18 years and older: Canadian children alive on the date of issue will receive five shares on their 18th birthday. Whatever equity remains in the company now valued at about $3.3 billion dollars will be divided between the federal government and private investors.

Individual Canadians and institutions will be allowed to purchase shares with a limit of three per cent held by any one shareholder. Thirty-three per cent of Petrocan will remain in the hands of the government.

If the B.C. experience is any indication Petrocan could find itself in the position of never needing another dime of government money. Nearly 2 million of the 2.4 million eligible B.C. residents applied for five free shares in BCRIC. Another 81 million shares were sold on the open market.

Some predicted that BCRIC would be lucky to raise $30 million from private investors. When the final tally was in, the conglomerate of various resource-oriented crown corporations had a tidy $487 million in investment capital.

In true election campaign rhetoric, Clark is trying to conjure an image of a Canadian owned corporation that will protect the country from the evils of middle-east oil nations. Despite objections from the opposition parties to giving Petrocan a profit motive, many Canadians will share that vision.

Although Clark is playing far better politics than when he advocated the complete sale of Petrocan to the private sector, many questions remain concerning Petrocan's role in national oil objectives.

The government would retain a controlling interest in the company, but it isn't clear whether that interest will ensure the pursuit goals of that are in the public interest though perhaps unprofitable financially.

We have argued in the past that Petrocan should be retained as a package so the profitable parts could pay for the development of non-profit projects bringing Canada closer to its goal of energy self-sufficiency. However, Clark says that the government would contract with Petrocan for such things as frontier development and state to state oil negotiations. If Petrocan becomes truly a private company, would these contracts be evaluated on their immediate profitability or their long-term value to the nation.

Clark says that Petrocan's board of directors would be appointed from the private sector, and be given a mandate to run the corporation as it sees fit. Conflicts seem inevitable between the government's energy policy and the natural business instinct to make a good showing for shareholders.

To offer Canadians a free stake in a wholly owned Canadian oil company is a powerful lure. To encourage further investment in Petrocan is a sound way of raising much needed capital. But Clark must also show that ownership by individual Canadians and institutions does work against the national need for energy self-sufficiency — a goal that may require less than profitable undertakings.

Philosophy of psychology

By JOHN McLEISH

Ideas are important. They control people's lives. Ideas have endurance. A survival technique of the human species is to preserve what we learn by writing it down. In this way we pass it on. Key ideas never die — they remain active, or lie dormant. This is why the history of psychology revolves around a very small number of problems. These are ideas people have come up with about human nature and the way it changes over time.

Five thousand years ago, the Egyptians left us a legacy of ideas in their picture writing. Two thousand years later the learned Chinese did the same. Other nations borrowed this store of ideas.

Different societies arose and disappeared. Intellectuals lived and died; but the key ideas about mankind survived. The "models" of behaviour we talk about today are, in essence, those argued about by the Greeks. Ideas have a space-age slant nowadays, shown by the vocabulary. This is often the only difference between the old and the new.

Behaviour models

Four basic models of human behaviour are available. These were devised to describe and explain what we used to call "conduct". Nowadays we talk about "behaviour," seeking to avoid value-judgements. Originally, until the middle of the last century, these models existed as philosophical tendencies, described as idealism, materialism, realism and agnosticism.

It is tempting, especially to a psychologist, to speculate that these basic responses are associated with something even more fundamental — namely, the kinds of people making them. Thus William James, regarded by some as the greatest American psychologist of the past, made a distinction between tendermindedness and toughmindedness. The tenderminded person tends to put the problems of the individual first and is ready to dispense with logical rigour and established codes if these create "hard cases". Such people tend to compromise. Toughminded people carry the argument through to the bitter end, regardless of the consequences to individuals.

We can make a further fundamental distinction between philosophies in terms of "transcendentalism" and "naturalism". The former believes in an ideal universe ; the latter denies that this is so. Naturalism takes it for granted that we must explain the universe, and man's place in it, without calling on some entity which is excluded from the operation of natural law. If we combine these two ways of classifying ideas about our experience we come up with four possible reactions. Thus, as a consistent point of view, toughminded transcendentalism was represented by the idealism of Plato; toughminded naturalism (materialism) was expressed very powerfully by his contemporary, Democritus. The rigour of these two positions was softened towards tenderminded views by Aristotle on the one hand (eclectic realism), and on the other hand by the Hippocratic school of medical practitioners (who didn't concern themselves with the issue and can be described as agnostics).

The relationship between philosophy and psychology is very direct. Psychology developed within philosophy and theology. For example, in the United States, until about 1880, psychology was taught as part of the ethics course, usually by the President of the College or University. The first generation of American psychologists was trained in German laboratories set up following 1879.

Religious influence

Until then, from the time of the Greeks, the central problems of psychology were set to it by religion. These problems were: whether human beings are responsible for their actions; whether we are naturally prone to evil; how mind and matter are related; do we have a soul as well as a body; lastly, how do we go about setting up a reliable model for the study of behaviour. These problems were bequeathed to us by the ancients.

The main difference between modern and ancient psychology is that we bypass these questions. It is assumed that the answers are unknowable (agnosticism) or that, if they were known, it wouldn't make any difference (realism).

Gifts for political stockings

VANCOUVER — Santa, be a good little noodnik and bring these down the chimney, huh?

For Joe Clark, walking lessons, talking lessons and a trampoline. The walking lessons are imperative since the only prime minister born with the syncopation of a pacer poses grave danger to adjacent objects including bayonets every time he ventures outdoors. The talking lessons might curb the mellifluous acrobatics of his tongue, since he lapses into paraliamentarian circumlocution with such ease that three Hansard reporters have been hospitalized with sprained index fingers in attempting to follow his syntax. The trampoline would be useful for anyone so casually capable of philosophical flip-flops that his left arm has difficulty figuring out where his right leg is headed.

Complete the image

For Pierre Trudeau, a zoot suit to go with that 1938 Italian movie producer fedora he is now sporting. If this campaign is going to resemble a re-run of a Bertolucci film we might as well go the whole trip. Also, a map of Western Canada, pointing out such features as The Last Spoke (can be found driven into any western Liberal's heart), the Saskatchewan vial containing Otto Lang's charisma, and the last remaining Liberal in Alberta (can be found in Calgary's Glenbow Museum, right beside the dinosaur bones.)

For Ed Broadbent, an illuminated plastic statue of Joan of Arc. Also, proper appreciation for those 3,000 NDP supporters who cleverly disguised their signatures in those postcards sent to Liberal national headquarters pleading that Pierre Trudeau be kept on as leader. It worked.

For Ray Hnatyshyn: someone to explain to you what your portfolio is all about.

For Senator Keith Davey, a new tailor, for starters. Also a film cassette of the Commons activities on the night of Dec. 13, when the party he manages decided to commit suicide in living color. It's the only known political version of Apocalypse Now.

Santa, a special present for little Johnny Crosbie: The Collected Works of Edgar Guest, a cameo appearance on Hee-Haw and a permanent guest spot on The Gong Show, wearing his mukluks and doing his imitation of Will Rogers starting in a musical based on the theory of John Maynard Keynes.

For Senator Robert de Cotret, good luck in explaining what a "stimulative deficit" is to the voters of Berthier-Maskinonge.

For Lily Schreyer, success in her attempts to have the finger bowls melted down and made into roller skates.

For Speaker James Jerome, a safe posting to the bench before the election. If the Liberals win (and the moon turns to blue cheese) he may find himself on the UIC Ski Team.

For Lloyd Axworthy, success in his efforts to acquaint Mr. Trudeau with the more salient features of Winnipeg: the cairn marking the birth of Larry Zolf's nose, the vial containing Premier Sterling Lyon's sense of humor, the University of Manitoba building housing the Jimmy Richardson Memorial Institute of Logical Thinking and School of Francophone Memorabilia.

For Don Macdonald, ample time on a Florida strand to study the philosophical treatises of Hegel, Descartes, Kant, Coutts and Davey. Don't hurry.

Mission impossible

For Fabien Roy, good luck in explaining to your constituents how you served the country by bringing them a February election.

For Premier Bill Bennett, a rest from all those nasty reporters who keep asking you why your chief inter-governmental expert goes around giving $1,000 bills to secretaries and forgets to file $60,000 or so in election expenses.

A memorable dinner

Christmas and politics don't seem to go together.

The spirit of Christmas — selfless giving, warmth, brotherhood — just doesn't seem to match up with the self-serving, manipulative, insult-shouting image that is all too often attributed to politicians.

Perhaps that was why it was especially pleasant this week to watch a group of politicians come together in a holiday community event that reflected well the spirit of Christmas.

The event was a Yuletide dinner for senior citizens, put on at the James Bay Community Centre and sponsored by the centre's nutrition committee. The aim was to see that every senior citizen could have a proper Christmas dinner and celebration at a price just about anyone could afford. (Where else could one find a full turkey dinner, with three vegetables, and plum pudding to follow, at a price of $3.50 a ticket?)

But more than that, the dinner also became a social event in its own right. Victoria seniors brought visiting friends and relatives from across North America — Chicago and San Diego were a couple of hometowns mentioned. Others brought their children, or even grandchildren. Staff from nearby nursing homes accompanied their patients.

And the politicians joined in with a right goodwill. Their role was to act as waiters and waitresses for the 190 guests. Each was given a proper white chef's apron, a dish-towel to carry professionally over the left arm, and instructions that probably only two plates at a time should be carried by those inexperienced in the trade.

It worked remarkably well. Only one alderman broke a dish of plum pudding on the floor. And aldermen, MLAs and school trustees from every point on the political spectrum laughed together as they waited in line, shared trays and utensils, and helped each other out with the last servings, just as though they'd never had a political argument in their lives.

Victoria MLA Charles Barber was the most resplendent of the volunteer crew, dressed in full tails. He explained he was off later in the evening to play the piano at another Christmas event. The others thought it was a pity there was no wine at the dinner so he could have shown off his costume as a wine waiter.

Barber also delivered the grace. "Heavens, a godless socialist who knows grace," came the whisper from the back of the waiters' line.

Mayor Bill Tindall and his wife Wilda both donned aprons to deliver the turkey, as did Aldermen Bob Wright, Ron MacKenzie, and Gretchen Brewin, school board chairman Carol Pickup, and Barber's seat-mate, Gordon Hanson. (For anyone who thinks that nine amateurs is a small brigade of waiters for 190 guests it should be added that members of the James Bay Community Resources Board and other James Bay organizations also tried their hand at the job.)

The guests were delighted. Some of them seemed to think that the sight of their mayor or MLA bending over their table with dinner plate or coffee pot was alone worth the admission charge. They asked the politicians to help them pull their crackers and offered them sections of Japanese oranges.

Moreover, when the dinner was over and the last of the seniors had gone home, nearly all the politicians were to be found grouped around one table with some of James Bay's community leaders, working out, apparently on a non-political basis, a wide variety of steps that could be taken to help the neighborhood.

With all sides agreed, can Christmas presents for neighborhoods be far behind?

Christmas is and should be beyond politics. It's good to know that our politicians can also recognize that and act accordingly.

Ellen Goodman

Tired Superwomen

In one moment, she wrapped it all up, the whole decade of change, the remaining problems, the new anxieties. Betty Friedan, the founding mother, the astute and caring observer of the women's movement, stood in front of a New York audience last month and said: "We told our daughters, you can have it all. Well, can they have it all? Only by being Superwoman. Well, I say NO to Superwoman!"

By any media calculation, the audience was a collection of superwomen. They wore their raised consciousness layered with dress-for-success suits. Yet they broke into spontaneous applause. They, too, were saying no to the Superwoman myth.

That moment is as good a place as any to stop and assess, to review and preview.

For all the social change in the past decade, all the rhetoric and action, we have moved from one national ideal of True Womanhood to another — from Supermom to Superwoman. The girl who was told that when she grew up she should get married and have children and keep house is now a grown-up woman being told that she should be married, have children, keep house and a job, or better yet, a career.

While mothers at home have felt increasingly pressured for "not working," mothers in the work force feel increasingly pressured by the double burden. They have been "liberated" to the Russian model — have a new role on top of an old one. Every study shows the same things. The overwhelming number of working mothers do the overwhelming amount of housework and child care. They may not have it all, but they seem to do it all.

Why has the change been so lopsided? I have asked that question a hundred times and heard a dozen different answers, ranging from the psychological to the economic. One feminist psychiatrist says that women spent the decade proving themselves. A sociologist believes that the person who initiates the change — the person who goes to work even out of necessity — accepts the personal responsibility for it.

A woman from a working-class neighborhood in Baltimore tells me that women are stretching their own energy to cover both their traditional and non-traditional values: the desire or demand to make Christmas pudding and a salary. An economist offers a different theory: "The average woman earns 59 cents to her husband's dollar. She sees her time as worth less and overworks herself. She gets it twice."

And last week a union leader said: "Remember three things. One: A lot of women with lousy jobs hope they'll be able to quit. By doing everything, they think they're keeping their options open. Two: The home is the only place some women have any power. They sure don't want to let go of that. Three: Never underestimate the power of the men in their lives to resist."

Perhaps single mothers were the first to wipe off the upbeat Superwoman makeup that covered the lines of fatigue. But now it seems to many women that the Superwoman model who looked so chic at the beginning of the decade looks worn at the end.

In 1970, women had just begun to agitate collectively for new choices. But in 1980, the "daughters" who were to "have it all" face new choices that are still limited, frightening as well as attractive.

Many women, especially those "up against the clock" of their thirties, approach motherhood with fear and trembling. Those for whom home-making, even temporary, is not a psychological or economic possibility see only two choices: superdrudge or childlessness.

In Washington, a 45-year-old woman says ironically, "I saw my mother frustrated at home. My daughter sees me overworked. I'm not such a great role model myself."

Superwoman was in part a creation of the self-help, self-reliant, self-improvement Seventies. This was the flip side of the so-called Me Decade. It was not new narcissism, but new isolation masked as independence.

"I used to take pride in being a Superwoman," said a Manhattan woman listening to Friedan that afternoon. "Now I see it, not as a personal victory but as a failure. A failure of my relationship with my husband, a failure of the work world, maybe even a failure of the society that just isn't adjusting to the way we live."

The Superwoman myth is exploding like an overstuffed sofa. Women are no longer willing to look inside themselves for all the answers and all the energy. At the turn of the decade, they don't want a Superwoman pep talk any more. They long for something more precious and more realistic: a support system — of families, the workplace and the community — to fend off this cultural kryptonite.

Whither Zimbabwe?

'Peace' won't end the problems

By ROBIN WRIGHT

(Wright is a CBS News correspondent in southern Africa. He wrote this for The Washington Post)

SALISBURY, Rhodesia — Julas Chakanyuka is 12 years old, a disturbed 12. He eats only one meal a day, owns only the clothes on his back, but no shoes, and has never been to school.

He lives with his parents and five brothers and sisters in a hut of plastic sheeting and rags and wobbly sticks on the outskirts of Salisbury in a shanty "town" of more than 300 families in an area smaller than a square block. The hut is not even big enough for all of them to sit in. There are only two cups for all to share, for both food and drink.

Julas is a war victim, one of about one million Rhodesians who have become refugees or cripples or exiles because of the bitter seven-year war in the troubled southern African territory. Julas doesn't remember when nighttime didn't signal fear of a sudden visit from guerrillas or security forces. Each year it became harder for his father, a peasant farmer in a rural tribal reserve, to eke out a living: crops were burned to intimidate, food was stolen for guerrillas. His older brother disappeared five years ago, maybe to join the guerrillas, maybe to hide under a new identity. No one knows for sure, nor has ever dared ask.

Theoretically, the agreement signed last week at the Rhodesian peace talks in London should bring an end to the Chakanyukas' problems. But father Robert Chakanyuka shakes his head at the suggestion. "How?" His face wrinkles in disbelief, the first emotion emerging from his refugee apathy. "Land's destroyed, home's burned, have to begin life all over, the children and me."

The Chakanyukas represent why the peace agreement does not mean a solution to the problems of Rhodesia. Government officials claim it will take up to 10 years to rehabilitate war victims and reconstruct the war-ravaged countryside and punished economy. The Red Cross estimates that one out of every seven blacks will require significant aid in rebuilding their lives. This year the Red Cross program was largely subsidized by a grant from the U.S. government. But that money only keeps people alive on an emergency basis. It will require massive doses of international aid and development funds to get them on their feet again.

In other words, a questionable future is ahead for many in a society that for 14 years has been isolated; for 11 years has scraped by economically, despite sanctions; for seven years has fought an increasingly nasty war, costing more than 20,000 lives and $1.6 million daily. Healing, a painful recovery, is the first priority for both blacks and whites as 89 years of white colonial rule are legally ended and all races settle down to sort out their problems.

For the past 14 years, since Prime Minister Ian Smith's break from Britain over the issue of majority rule, the most common question asked by any visitor has been: "What's going to happen to Rhodesia?" There is a stock answer: "It will become Zimbabwe, ruled by a recognized black government." But the real question is: "Whither Zimbabwe?" The implications for the new state are immense, diverse and complex.

For whites — now just 220,000 strong but vitally needed for at least another decade — there is an extreme psychological test ahead. Hardened by the cause of their resistance, they must accept overnight the fact that their opponents will be coming home and actually will be encouraged to become part of what has been the whites' own culture.

It won't be easy for people like the Tilleys, farmers on the outskirts of Salisbury. At dusk on Jan. 11, 1978, the Tilleys drove up their dirt driveway, tired from a day of shopping. Discussing dinner as they got out of the car, they were greeted by a fusillade from Russian-made AK47 rifles. A gang of insurgents had been waiting for them for hours. Fifteen-year-old Colin's brains were blown all over the Peugeot station wagon and carport; his parents escaped into the house. It marked the first major incident near the capital, and was an ominous sign of the deep penetration of guerrillas.

Eight months later daughter Cheryl Tilley was in Kariba, organizing the details of her wedding with her prospective in-laws. She set out for Salisbury on Air Rhodesia flight 825, excited and happy, friends said, for the first time since the death of her brother. But she never got to Salisbury. Flight 825 was shot down by guerrillas loyal to Patriotic Front co-leader Joshua Nkomo. Thirty-eight died in the crash; another 10 were killed by guerrillas who tracked down the wreckage in the remote bush of Urungwe tribal trustland.

Now Nkomo is coming home. The Tilleys want Zimbabwe to work. They want to stay. But they admit it's going to be tough seeing Nkomo's name on the next ballot. Not all whites are that open-minded. There is still a $250,000 reward for Nkomo's head, offered by a group of white right-wingers.

The change in Clem Tholet, Smith's son-in-law and the nation's most noted singer, may reflect a more optimistic side. A year ago Tholet was best known for his husky- voiced "Rhodesians Never Die," a pep song for soldiers and for whites in general. Today, he's on the pop charts for "Zimbabwe Peace Dream," a totally different sound, based on African rhythms and recorded with a black band, with a totally different theme. As he said in a radio interview, when asked if he was cashing in on the times: "Definitely not. It's my way of saying we've got to make it work."

What frightens Rhodesian whites the most is that they may no longer have control over their lives. From now on, blacks will run the show, a prospect the whites find none too reassuring when they look at the rest of the continent. Crossing their fingers, they hope for another Kenya or Ivory Coast, countries that have prospered, economically and politically, with multiracial societies. But Rhodesia also has the one major problem that has plagued the rest of Africa: tribalism.

Besides tribalism, a second issue may supersede pure politics: the war.Technically the sensitive cease-fire negotiations in London should end the conflict. But even British diplomats concede in private that there will probably continue to be incidents, whether deliberate or due to ignorance of the cease-fire arrangements.

The future will depend partially on the election. But with so many parties. few observers believe anyone will get a clear-cut majority. The result could be a coalition that could go either way. With the Patriotic Front dominating, most lands and some industries and mining firms would probably be nationalized and collective farms and industries established, as in Mozambique.

In some ways, the Patriotic Front vision is to start all over again, wiping out the white man's infrastructure, and to give, in a literal sense, every man and woman an equal opportunity in the rebirth of a nation.

But while the redistribution of wealth is the "sexiest" issue, the basic problems for blacks are, instead, education and employment — also the keys to success or failure, by western standards, of Zimbabwe, for without the fundamental ingredients there is little chance of recuperation.

Letters to the editor

Willing to tighten

The scandalous action of the Liberals and NDP in foisting another election on the Canadian people will not, I hope, be forgotten on Feb. 18.

The millions of dollars which will be spent on this unnecessary election could be used for more worthy causes.

The opposition parties accuse the Conservative government of not fullfilling election promises and of making no provision for a reduction in interest rates in their budget.

First, what political party does make promises during an election period and then keeps them once elected?

In the Conservative case they could not have been fully aware of the seriousness of the mess inherited from the Liberals until they took office. Secondly, regarding interest rates, it has for many years been the policy of the government in power to keep interest rates in line or slightly ahead of the U.S. simply to prevent the outflow of Canadian dollars and the weakening of our dollar in relation to the U.S. dollar. Who wants a 75 or 80 cent dollar when so many necessities such as food are imported from the U.S.?

Do the people of Canada remember Trudeau's 'Just Society' so often promised? How many times were we told that inflation was under control?

The Conservative budget was, I believe, commendable since it conveyed a message to the Canadian people to face up to the realities of the economic situation of the present day.

Canadians, I believe, are willing and ready to make some sacrifice in our standard of living if given leadership which, in their budget, the government was attempting to do. Let us put them back with the necessary working majority.

More power to men like Joe Clark, John Crosbie and not forgetting, too, that able and plain speaking Foreign Minister, Flora MacDonald. — A. G. F. Sutton, 2789 Musgrave.

Flip-flop coming

Well, kiddies, the master tactician has out-manoeuvred us again!

Seeing the handwriting on the wall, our PET has allowed the Kid from High River enough rope to hang himself; allowed the Conservative party enough time to wallow in the trough and scrape at the dregs of the pork barrel; and taught the Liberal dissidents that he is the only big gun they have if they want to hold unto the reins of power.

The next step is for the PQ, who have been keeping a low profile, to start rattling the chains and moaning in the dark. Then the White Knight can come riding in on his trusty steed, Soothing Syrup, and rescue us from the two-headed dragon, Separation and Day of Reckoning.

Have we forgotten the wage control's flipflop after the last federal election? Kiddies, that was nothing to what will be laying in wait for us this time when enough voters rush to the polls to bring back Papa Trudeau to protect us from the spectre of reality.

After giving away jobs and development to other countries through defence spending; selling off majority control of our industries and natural resources and letting the profits be drained out of the country; and mortgaging our ice castle to the eyebrows, the Liberals will now point at the jam on the Conservative jowls and accuse them of being the villains who done the dirty deed. And we will pretend to believe it because we don't want to face up to our Moment of Truth.

Now that he has convenient fall guys to take the blame, Emperor Trudeau will let us have it with both barrels as soon as he is back on his cabinet throne.

After the average taxpayer has totted that barge, lifted that bale long enough to fill the pork barrel, guess what Fat Cats will be enjoying the feast of plenty and letting a few of the tidbits drift down to tease the mules into carrying the load farther down the road?

I for one would rather take the bitter pill from Mr. Broadbent's hand. Because I hope to God that he and the NDP party are swallowing it along with me, not skimming the cream off the top and giving it away to Big Money buddies who want their chance to play monopoly and wallow in the trough.

Whether we like it or not we all have to face the truth and put our house in order or lose the mortgage by default. And wouldn't the multinationals just love to get in and rape our natural resources.? — Gloria Browne, 382 W. Burnside.

Wake up Canada

A person can't help but become cynical about our political system and the way in which fortunes rise and fall. After 16 years of non-government under a Liberal oligarchy, Canadians finally choose to elect a government with realistic ideas and more importantly, individuals who think for them[illegible] budget the Conservative government had shown a willingness to tackle the economic disaster left by the previous regime.

Unfortunately, the Grits have lost their concern for the welfare of this country. Instead they choose to place their own personal desire for power above the interests of the country. I only hope the Canadian public awakens soon and sees the Liberal party for what it really is: a group of plastic charlatans in three-piece suits. — K. A. Jones, 5145 Cordova Bay Road.

Teams hit highs in scenes from '79

Another year, and not a bad one for our town. Not bad, at all.

There were several major championships, a couple of near misses, the usual disappointments, a few hassles and, most of all, hope for the future.

That's it — HOPE. That's what keeps things going and the athletes coming back . . . remember the time . . . if I'd only . . . I shoulda haddit . . . we'll get 'em next time.

Team sports, in whatever order, had it best — Budgets, Shamrocks, Wests and Home Lumber were the highlighters.

And one biggie had to be the Budgets' (well Canada's) softball victory in the Pan-American Games. It was tantamount to a world championship, which Budgets (nee Bate) already had a share of. And, from all of us, to that partly national team under coach Harvey Stevenson, a "well done".

The disappointment followed, as so often happens in sport, when Budgets were beaten in their very own Canadian finals for the first time in four years. It was distressing in another way as Victoria now won't be the national standard bearer in the next World at Seattle next fall.

Otherwise, the Shamrocks and Vic West won big, as the saying goes, and right at home. After a near miss last fall, the Rocks took their tormentors, Peterborough Red Oaks, to task in the Mann Cup final and whipped them good, four straight. Vic West, with a previous national soccer crown behind them, added another jewel to the diadem with a Canadian championship right here, just as the Irish had done. To those coaches go the credit too — Bill Munroe of the Rocks and Bob English for Wests.

There were also some lacrosse hassles — whether Nanaimo would ever give up the playing rights to Kevin Alexander, whether Ron MacNeil really was quitting the Irish to go to Nanaimo, whether a lacrosse ball should be painted, or not — but it all came out in the wash.

In basketball, Home Lumber did what has become a habit. Under coach Jack Lusk, they won another Canadian women's title. Nationally, so did Goodwill Bottlers, in intermediate lacrosse, under Frank Alexander, and MacNeil's midgets, also in lacrosse.

If that was noteworthy stuff, so was Flora Martin (and her rink) winning another Canadian senior women's curling crown and being named to the Curling Hall-of-Fame; Wendy Barlow plucking off a couple of major net titles; the sisters Bland, Nina and Jennifer, moving into the net as new threats for the future; UVic Vikings coming within a missed basket or two of winning the national intercollegiate men's basketball title; Philip Delesalle finishing 12th in the entire world of men's gymnastics; and Victoria Cougars giving it a good try but not coming as close they should be this year in their continuing bid for the Memorial Cup.

Some other flashbacks, strictly from memory, also go to Pat Walter and Bruce Ford, who must rank among the world's top scullers; Jim Rutledge embarking on a career as a professional golfer; Dale Shaw, disappointed often, but still striving in a similar quest; Ivan Thompson winning the Mike Kelly award as the best player in the Mann Cup final; Garnet Moen going on from the Wests to the Boston Tea-Men as a professional footballer; the baseball Mussels, still trying to attract attention, but failing, even with a winner; the growing popularity of standardbred racing (or is it the weather?); the once fine autosport program being marred by dispute, division and defection; the continuance of James Bay as a rugby power, and helping Canada, no less, in a win over the French B team. Hey! That was a biggie.

So those are a few of the quickies from a fading past. You will have your own.

Live with them. Enjoy them. It's your life.

Flyers callous

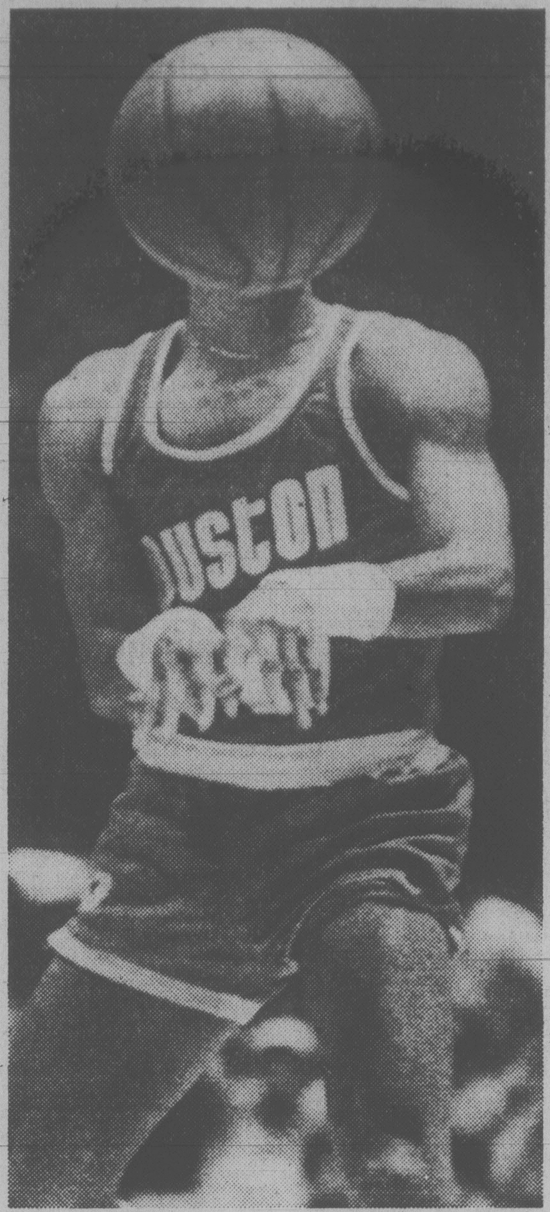
The Flyers weren't gift-giving as they handed Esquimalt Legion a 14-2 defeat to move three points ahead of third-place Oak Bay in the six-team race.

Tony St. Denis and Len Meyer each scored four goals for the Flyers. Greg Hollett and Bruce Berkey each scored two.



BALL-HEADED player isn't a man from outer space. He's Allen Leavell of Houston Rockets of National Basketball Association. Picture was snapped just as he passed ball in game against Philadelphia '76ers Friday night. Philadelphia won 117-106.

Missed field goal gives Indiana win

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Brent Johnson missed a 27-yard field goal attempt with seven seconds remaining, allowing Indiana to salvage a 38-37 upset victory over previously unbeaten and ninth-ranked Brigham Young in the Holiday Bowl college football game Friday night.

With 6:53 remaining, Indiana had taken its one-point lead when sophomore Tim Wilbur raced 62 yards with a punt return for a touchdown and Kevin Kellogg kicked the extra point.

BYU roared downfield in the final minutes behind the passing of all-America quarterback Marc Wilson, who marched his team from its own 21 to the Indiana 10. But Johnson, who had earlier converted field goals of 46, 29 and 28 yards, shanked the ball far left and short of the uprights.

On Wilbur's game-deciding punt return, he scooped up the ball and found daylight after the punt had hit the ground and bounced off team-mate Kevin Kenley.

That score came after BYU, trailing 31-24, got 13 unanswered points to go ahead 37-31 early in the fourth quarter.

Trailers moving in as Canucks falter

Times News Services

The field is closing in on Vancouver Canucks in the Smythe Division of the National Hockey League.

And much of the rush was concentrated on Friday night's action.

Washington Capitals played the major spoiler with a 2-1 home-ice win over the Canucks, while St. Louis Blues were disposing of Atlanta Flames 5-1 and Winnipeg Jets were taking care of Chicago Black Hawks 4-1.

That left the Canucks with a two point-edge over Chicago with Winnipeg third, five points behind the Canucks and the Blues fourth, just six points back.

In the other game, Colorado defeated Edmonton 5-4 to raise its record to 23 points, four behind St. Louis.

Coming into the Vancouver game Washington had compiled a 6-21-5 record, the worst in the league, and they needed good goalkeeping to get the job done.

Boutin held Vancouver scoreless for nearly 2½ periods before the Canucks were able to score.

Vancouver coach Harry Neale praised the play of both Boutin and Canucks' goalie Glen Hanlon.

"Both goalies played well," said Neale who added he felt his club exhibited enough effort to gain at least a tie.

The Capitals took advantage of a power play to break a scoreless deadlock as Tommy Rowe cashed in a rebound. They added to their lead with a power-play goal by Ryan Walter before Vancouver's Rick Blight broke Rollie Boutin's shutout bid.

Boutin stopped 28 Canucks drives.

"Over-all, we got the bounces tonight," said Blues coach Red Berenson of his team's victory over the Flames.

Defenceman Alain Daigle scored the lone Chicago goal at 2:58 of the first period, while Lorne Stamler and Willy Lindstrom rounded out the scoring for the Jets.

Greater attention coming to injured

Times News Services

National Hockey League general managers say they will be paying closer attention to their injured players after this week's court ruling in Vancouver in favor of former Canuck defenceman Mike Robitaille.

Mr. Justice William Esson of the B.C. Supreme Court awarded Robitaille $348,000 damages in his suit against the Canucks, which claimed he was forced to play while injured. Esson said evidence showed Robitaille was hit during a game in 1977, aggravating an earlier injury and causing permanent spinal cord damage that caused partial paralysis.

In telephone interviews, several general managers said teams do not force players to return to action until medically ready.

"I've been in the league for 30 years and have never seen it happen," said Emile Francis, general manager of St. Louis Blues. "When I played, nobody told me I had to play. The only person who can judge is yourself. It comes down to the player and whether he can play.

"I don't know of any one team that would force a player to play if he weren't physically able."

Other general managers agreed they wouldn't insist on an injured player taking to the ice.

Lou Nanne, general manager of the Minnesota North Stars, said: "We have more than adequate faith in our replacements."

"We have very qualified doctors," said Larry Gordon, general manager of Edmonton Oilers. "We rely on what the doctors tell us and what the player says."

Gregg wants out to seek Bengal post

TORONTO (CP) — Forrest Gregg, head coach of Toronto Argonauts, has apparently asked to be released from the Canadian Football League club to seek employment in the National Football League.

Gregg, who has two years remaining on his CFL contract, has indicated he would like to pursue a head coaching career in the NFL — most likely with Cincinnati Bengals.

Lew Hayman, the Argonauts' president, confirmed Friday night that he had spent the entire day in a meeting with Gregg and that he is trying everything he can to keep the former all-pro offensive guard with Green Bay Packers in the Toronto camp.

It has been rumored that Gregg is the heir apparent to the Bengals coaching job, which opened after Homer Rice and his entire coaching staff was fired after Cincinnati's final game of the season.

Tiger goalie shines

REGINA (CP) — Brad Kempthorne is on a game-winning kick but Medicine Hat Tigers also owe goaltender Ron Popplestone a vote of thanks for their latest Western Hockey League victory.

Kempthorne, obtained from Brandon a few weeks ago, scored his second goal of the night at 5:05 of overtime to give Medicine Hat Tigers a 5-4 win over Regina Pats in Friday's lone game.

Kempthorne also scored the winner when Tigers edged Brandon 5-3 the previous night.

Regina's Brian Varga sent the game into overtime with a goal late in the game as the Pats unleashed a 32-shot barrage in the third period. But Popplestone kept the Tigers, who were outshot 68-27, in the game with a fine performance until Kempthorne got the winner.

Medicine Hat took eight of 10 minor penalties and a misconduct and the teams split two majors.

Holiday cash bonspiel

Curlers will be among the active sportsmen over the holiday period with a 16-rink men's invitational cash bonspiel set for the Racquet Club next week.

Sixteen rinks will compete in the $1,600 event which begins Thursday night.

Invited are rinks skipped by Brad Clarke, Steve Skillings, Barry Harvey, Bruce Coulter, Don Matheson, Bob Hawkes, Al Frame and Bill Morris, all of the Harley Davidson League; Harvey Hodge of Victoria Club, Ivan Carlisle of Port Alberni, Bob and Jim Gallaugher of Playland, Chuck Perry of Comox, Lowell Goulden of Juan de Fuca, Pat Marshall of Esquimalt and Steve Williams of Duncan.

There will be a double-knockout format to eliminate eight teams. The winning eight rinks will then enter sudden-death.

Entry fee is $100 a rink. First prize is $640, second $400, third $240 and fourth $160. Four losers in the first round of the sudden-death final receive $40.

Draw times are Thursday at 5 and 9 p.m., Friday at 5 and 8 p.m., and Saturday at 5 and 8 p.m.

Start slowly and train properly

The Royal Victoria Marathon, an event sanctioned by the B.C. Track and Field Association with the support of radio station VI90 and the Victoria Times, takes place Sept. 20 next year.

Because the marathon committee hopes to attract large numbers of participants from the Victoria area, including many who have never run in this kind of event before, a top-qualiity training clinic will be offered in the nine-month period leading up to the race to encourage and promote proper conditioning.

However, you don't have to commit yourself to the Royal Victorian Marathon to take part in the clinic. If you do decide to enter, keep in mind that in marathon running the true goal is to finish the course, which is twice around from Mile 0 in Beacon Hill Park to Willows Beach.

The clinics will be held Sundays at 9:30 a.m. at the YM/YWCA (later on in the summer at the Cameron Bandshell in the park) and the first one is Jan. 6.

In addition to the clinic, both the Times and VI90 plan to get into the training grind.

For the next six weeks, a series of articles will be published each Saturday in the Times. They will deal, essentially, with proper conditioning for long-distance running.

As well, VI90 will carry a program of tips for runners every Friday at 7:15 p.m.

The major deterrent that inhibits the first-time runner is getting started! The key to a successful training program is to start slowly. If you've had little or nothing to do with fitness in the past, or if you overdo your amount of exercise in the beginning, you are bound to experience stiff, sore muscles.

A regular running program adds stress to your daily routine in an attempt to enable your body to adapt and increase your endurance. But do not be discouraged. You should simply be aware of any obstacles that might be encountered when beginning a fitness program.

You must be patient. Forget heavy activity on the first days of your program. Resist the temptation to be overzealous. Ending up with torn ligaments and sore muscles can destroy your glamourous dreams of physical fitness.

Don't end your running career prematurely by stupidity. Let your common sense prevail. Take your time and plan your exercise program in conjunction with the Royal Victoria Marathon Training Manual and the guidelines set by the clinic instructor.

To receive your manual, fill out and mail the coupon on this page. Fully illustrated, the manual contains a nine-month training calendar and information every runner should know.

Remember, the clinic is free, but all participants are urged to purchase the manual for their own easy reference. Training manuals are also available at local recreation centres.

One thing strongly recommended by the fitness professionals is a check-up and stress test by your family doctor. This may seem unnecessary to you, but it will give you much useful information and make you aware of any limitations you may have due to physical problems.

For those beginning the standard program in January the maiden voyage is a run twice around Beacon Hill Park, a total distance of 3.6 miles.

Intended to train all parts of the body to sustain continuous forward motion for one hour, this run can be accomplished by running and walking if necessary. This beginning group is known as the "Park Group" for obvious reasons.

Those who flaunt their mastery at this distance are immediately promoted to the "Gonzales Bay" group. The entire month of January is geared towards this promotion.

The "Y" has a wonderful way to kick off the New Year and excess Christmas poundage.

Join the New Year's Day "Fun Run."

This year the popular event will be preceded by a symposium on running. From 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 there will be a film on the subject of running and talks given on fitness by two leading cardiologists, Dr. Bill Mackie and Dr. Norgrove Penny. The Fun Run follows.

Canadians' 1-3 finish wiped out by weather

SCHLADMING, Austria (CP) — Canada's bad luck in World Cup downhill racing continued today when a jury annulled Steve Podborski's victory in the Planai downhill because of poor visability.

Podborski finished today's race in a time of 1:59.28, more than a second ahead of runner-up Michael Veith of West Germany, who finished in 2:00.36. Ken Read of Calgary had finished third.

However, conditions for the race were marginal, with some fog and snow on the upper reaches of the course and rain at the finish. The start of the race had been delayed several times, but the weather got progressively worse.

The decision to call off the race came after 25 skiers had attempted the course.

"I had a good run," said Podborski, who recorded the best time from start number one. "The course was fast and rough and I was out of control several times on the upper stretches. My start number helped me hold it together.

"This certainly won't go dow in the annals as the world's greatest race, but almost no world cup race is fair to everyone."

It was the third consecutive week in which the Canadians recorded the best training times only to lose out in the actual race.

At Val d'Isre, Read fell and Podborski lost a ski to knock them out of the race, and last week in Val Gardena the Canadians had the wrong wax applied to their skies, probably costing Read a victory.

At Laax, Switzerland, Hans Kirchgasser led a troop of Austrians into the top five places of a European Cup downhill race Friday.

Kirchgasser, 22, swooped down the 3,350-metre course in two minutes 04.65 seconds to win by a margin of nearly six-tenths of a second.

He was followed by teammates Dieter Amann, Gerhard Pfaffenbichler, Reinhold Kern and Hubert Nachbauer, with Italy's Siegfried Kerschbauer breaking the Austrian monopoly in sixth place.

Hoop surprise for Islanders

NANAIMO — Pollsters take note! There is such a place as Steveston, and it's not just for honorable mention. It's for real in the B.C. high school boys' basketball picture.

Steveston Packers Friday surprised the experts and, more important, the Nanaimo Islanders, top-ranked club in B.C., 63-59, in the final of the annual Nanaimo Christmas Classic.

Earlier in the week in the December poll of high school teams, the Islanders were ranked No. 1 and Steveston got only honorable mention. Undoubtedly that is to change.

Kurt Kelly scored 38 points for the Islanders against Courtenay and 16 against Steveston in the final.

"We were flat," said coach John Levering of the previously-undefeated Islanders whose record now is 10-1. "We just couldn't do anything right."

Steveston trailed 35-28 at the half.

Russians finish on top

Earlier in the day, Canada Selects took their first point in four games by playing Finland to a 0-0 stalemate.

In the tournament's final match, the Russians and Czechoslovaks scored two goals each in the first period. The Soviets added their third in the second and held the lead through a scoreless third period.

Czechoslovakia placed second in the tournament followed by Finland, Sweden and Canada.

The Selects, made up of 13 National Hockey League irregulars and nine from the Olympic squad that will represent Canada at Lake Placid, N.Y., in February, were put together on Dec. 10.

Bowlers pause for Christmas break

Different paths led to the same destination for Dorothy Krimmer and Fred Hickey, who topped the fivepin divisions during the 11th week in the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest.

Dorothy came up with steadily improving games to post a 248-253-278 — 779 series in the Wednesday Majors League to top the women's division while Fred started off strong and finished with 372-310-252 — 934 series in the Monday Classic League to collect men's laurels.

Both winning efforts were posted at Town and Country Lanes.

Bowlers competing in regular league play on the south end of Vancouver Island take a two-week Christmas break starting today. Competition resumes again Jan. 5.

Esquimalt skaters in national trials

Three members of the Esquimalt Speedskating Club, which will play host to the North American championships Mar. 28-30 at Memorial Arena, will take part in the Canadian team trials Dec. 27-31 in Saskatoon.

Dave Shields, his sister Brenda, and Rod Phillips will compete in the trials which will also serve to select the team to take part in the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y., in February.

Dave Shields surpassed most of the Olympic qualifying times during competitions last year and is favored to take one of the Olympic team berths.

Verbal confirmations have been received from both Australia and Japan that their national teams will supply some added international flavor to the North American championships.

Six-month term for dart-thrower

NOTTINGHAM, England (AP) — A young soccer hooligan was sentence to jail for six months Friday for throwing a dart at Arsenal goalkeeper Pat Jennings.

The dart was thrown by apprentice bricklayer Clifford Marriott, 17, during an English League match against Nottingham Forest earlier this month. Jennings was speared in the arm by the missile.

Marriott, a Nottingham Forest fan, was told by the magistrate, John Aram, that the country had been shocked by the incident.

The magistrate praised Jennings for "the responsible way he dealt with the incident, possibly avoiding far more trouble than occurred at the time."

The Arsenal player removed the dart from his arm, put it on the ground and reported the incident at half-time.

Marriott, who pleaded guilty to malicious wounding, said in a statement: "I was upset and mad because Forest were losing. Arsenal scored in the first three minutes and I wasn't very happy about that."

AIA suffers rare setback

BRANDON (CP) — Winnipeg's Nicolett Inn, Canada's Senior "A" men's basketball champions, handed the Burnaby-based Athletes in Action a rare 89-85 defeat in the Blue-Gold Classic Friday.

Experts forecast major California quake in '80s

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An earthquake of devastating proportions is expected to strike California — probably in a populated area — within the next decade, two seismologists say.

The chance of such a quake now is about 50-50, and "every passing year these odds will steadily increase," says the report by Bruce Bolt, director of the Seismographic Station at the University of California in Berkeley, and Richard Jahns, professor of geology and applied earth sciences at Stanford University.

They said the quake will probably have a Richter scale reading of more than seven. The Richter scale measures ground motion, and a quake with a magnitude of seven is classified as a major earthquake capable of inflicting widespread damage.

Meanwhile, an unidentified Virginia man is betting that a major earthquake will strike the state a lot sooner. A bookmaker in Las Vegas says the man, in his mid-40s, has bet $5,000 at 70-to-1 odds that Los Angeles will be destroyed with more than one million deaths by an earthquake sometime between noon New Year's Eve and noon Jan. 1, 1981.

Bolt and Jahns, writing in the journal of U.C. Berkeley Institute of Governmental Studies, based their prediction on measurements of strain along California faults, and on historical records of earthquake occurrence for hundreds of years.

They said the next large quake is likely to strike a populated area, mainly because of the state's increasing urbanization.

"In fact, of California's principal urban concentrations, all except the Sacramento and San Diego areas, appear to be exposed to fairly high levels of seismic risk," they said.

The only major earthquake in the U.S. to occur in a heavily populated region was the San Francisco earthquake of 1906, they said. That quake, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, was estimated at 7.9.

But "metropolitan areas in both northern and southern California are certain to be hit by major earthquakes in the future," they said.

The seismologists say California's response to the danger of a great quake is inadequate. Residents have "totally unrealistic ideas of what they will be able to do during and after a major quake, including such normally routine things as making telephone calls or driving home in their cars," they said.

Forming the California Seismic Safety Commission in 1975 was a positive step, they said. But they see a need for greater awareness of the risk of an earthquake, and more emphasis on educating the public on how to cope with that risk.

Arab world on the eve of renaissance

recapitulated here. What interests us at this point is the process by which the Arabs first rejected the European cultural offering, then accepted them, then developed a covetous-contemptuous ambivalence toward them and, finally, turned to the difficult task of appropriating and adapting them, and of beginning to build upon them their own cultural responses. It is this last constructive phase of the Arab reaction to the West which justifies our speaking of an incipient Second Arab Renaissance.

The transformation of the Arab world, whose beginnings can conveniently be dated from Napoleon's invasion of Egypt (1798), was slow and hesitant at first, but then picked up speed and, since 1973, has shown a phenomenal rate of acceleration. There are several indices by which one can measure the extent of this change.

One is the increase of the population. It has been reliably estimated, for example, that the population of Egypt has increased tenfold in the last 150 years: around 1830, it was 4 million; today, more than 40 million. If this rate of increase has held good for the whole Arab world, then the 180 million Arabs of today are the offspring of no more than 16 million five generations ago.

At present, the Arabs have one of the highest rates of natural increase in the world; their numbers are increasing by 25 to 30 per cent annually.

The state of general education is another index of advancement. The Arab world is still beset with the problem of illiteracy, but while in 1830 no more than 5 per cent of all Arabs were able to read and write, today in several Arab countries the proportion of the literate has risen above the 50 per cent mark. With the great wealth which today is at the disposal of the Arabs, the educational effort is accelerating.

As for higher education, while in 1830 there was not a single Arab university, today there are dozens, and the number and size are still growing.

In addition, tens of thousands of Arab students are enrolled in all major and many minor universities and colleges in Canada, the United States, England, France and other Western countries, and those of them who return home after graduating become additional sources of Westernizing influence.

The introduction of political institutions into a traditional, religion- and kinship-oriented society is an extremely difficult process. Still, more and more Arab states are making valiant, or at least half-hearted, efforts to grapple with the problem. Popular elections were adopted only very recently by some Arab countries, as was the concept of democratic political representation.

Dictatorial absolutistic rule by a monarch, a military strongman, or a religious charismatic leader is closer to Arab (and Moslem) tradition, and the elimination of such forms of governments, it can be foreseen, will not be easy.

On the other hand, nationalism — itself an introduction from the West — has found ready acceptance among all Arabs probably because they can perceive it as something akin to the old Arab polity based on kinship and religious cohesion.

The fantastic and still growing oil revenues which since 1973 have been flowing into Arab lands have enabled Arab nationalism to express itself in military might.

It boggles the mind to consider the power the Arab states have acquired within the last few years. Today, the Arabs possess larger manpower and arsenals than the forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Europe. They have 500,000 more men under arms than NATO, three times the artillery of NATO, 3,000 more tanks and several hundred more aircraft.

It has been estimated that in 1980 the airpower of the Arab states will equal that of the Warsaw Pact forces, will be double that of NATO and three times that of China, and that the number of tanks of the Arab states will equal that of the United States.

In their determination to arm themselves against each other, against Israel and against other neighboring countries, the Arab states have obtained military hardware from East and West alike: from the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, the United States, England, France and Italy, to mention only their major suppliers.

The renewed vigor of the Arab states has found its expression in their sustained diplomatic offensive in the United Nations and other international forums against Israel. They have become a leading component in the Third World and their voice is being listened to with respect wherever and whenever they care to raise it.

Their financial and political support of the Palestine Liberation organization has made that group of avowed terrorists accepted by an increasing number of nations all over the world

Within an astonishingly short time, their oil-based affluence has awakened the Arabs' long dormant financial talents. Today, Arab banks and finance companies are a power to be reckoned with in financial circles all over the globe.

Arab investment experts, helped by Western advisers, have found lucrative holdings and financial institutions in Europe and the United States. Their threat to drop the dollar as the currency for their oil has sent jitters all along Wall Street.

Affluent Arab customers fill the stores of Paris, London and other shopping capitals of the world. Street signs and posters in Arabic no longer cause surprise in Oxford Street, Fifth Avenue, or les Champs-Elyses.

For the time being, cultural relations between the West and the Arab world go largely in one direction only: The Arabs take from the West everything they can now so easily afford and do not yet exert any noticeable cultural influence on the West.

They are now in the stage in which their forebears were in the early Middle Ages. At that time, they appropriated the cultural achievements of the ancient Greeks, before they proceeded to build upon them their own culture.

Today, they voraciously acquire, and are in the process of digesting, the culture of the West, as a preliminary to erecting upon it a new superstructure of their Second Renaissance, which undoubtedly will combine elements of Arabism, Mohammedanism and Westernism.

In the meantime, sensitive observers begin to discern the first signs of the psychological effects of the newly won Arab self-assurance in the Arabs' relations to the West.

In the growing affluent Arab middle class, one can sense a softening, or toning down, of the hatred and envy which had characterized the Arab approach to the West in the last two or three generations. As one Arab friend recently told me, "You don't hate those whose services you can buy."

The conviction that to be an Arab is again to belong to the proudest, most honored people on Earth, al-hamdu lillah (praise be to God), has already begun to filter down to poorest fellah and Bedouin.

The first Arab Renaissance did not commence until more than a century has passed after the establishment of the Arab empire. Only then did the Arabs forge ahead toward a global leadership in philosophy, literature, medicine, the sciences.

In the present Second Arab Renaissance, it foreseeably will take a much shorter time. The global power of the new "Arab nation," consisting of 21 Arab states, has been achieved in the astoundingly short time of seven years. Given another seven years, or perhaps a dozen, and the new Arab cultural upsurge will a most inevitably follow.

Outside forces can, of course, hinder or promote such a development. A nuclear holocaust unleashed by the superpowers would devastate also the Arab world — and much more horribly and thoroughly than did the Mongol invasions and the Black Death.

But inasmuch as their future fate is in the hands of the Arabs themselves, there are several pitfalls they must know how to avoid if they want to achieve a Second Arab Renaissance.

Most importantly, they must learn to overcome their traditional propensity to conflict which even at this very moment has several Arab states embroiled in fighting among themselves, and which sets them against their neighbors within their countries (such as the Kurds in Iraq, the Christians and Moslems in Lebanon, the blacks in the Sudan), or without (such as Israel, or the Polisario in the former Spanish Sahara).

And they must rid themselves of their traditional xenophobia which still explodes with predictable frequency into violence against foreigners, and especially against the visible presence in their midst of the representatives of the one country from which they have been receiving more cultural influences and more material aid than from any other.

Aggressiveness and militancy in people caught up in a great movement of self-reconstruction can be a bane if it is allowed to degenerate into violence, and to lead to mob terror and ultimately to armed conflict. It can be a boon and a blessing if channeled constructively into major problem areas, such as health, education, welfare and the severe economic limitations represented by the arid natural environment, all of which must be tackled with energy and determination before the potential of the Second Arab Renaissance can be realized.

Late flight returning April 27

Air Canada will reinstate a late flight from Vancouver to Victoria effective April 27, the company said today.

Exact time of the flight has not been determined.

The last Air Canada flight from Vancouver now is at 9:45 p.m.

Glen Steeves, Victoria spokesman for the company, said an announcement earlier today that the flight will leave Vancouver at 10:50 p.m. was erroneous.

The flight will leave later than 9:45 p.m. but not as late as 10:50 p.m., he said.

The company has not yet decided on the takeoff time.

The late flight will become a permanent fixture, he said.

Air Canada was criticized by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce and by Education Minister Brian Smith (SC-Oak Bay) when it announced it was rescheduling its flight 143 from 10:55 p.m. to 9:45 p.m., leaving the city without late service to the capital.

Tories sure Canadians will opt for 'castor oil'

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

WINNIPEG — It is a short drive from the gas pump to the ballot box.

And no matter what announcements and adventures litter Joe Clark's campaign trail in the next eight weeks, he is convinced that the single fact that will count most for millions of voters on election night is that the Tories want to charge them 18 cents more for a gallon of gasoline.

That was Clark's position this week as he headed into his second election campaign and that is exactly what he insists it will still be on Feb. 18.

The prime minister is acutely aware that he is asking every driver to fork out an extra $3 for a fill-up and he hears the grumbling across the land. Yet Clark is so convinced he can sell the idea that he is prepared to stake his own political future and the continued life of his young government on it.

ELECTION 80

While Clark was busy aboard his campaign jet this week polishing his umpteenth speech about facing harsh realities and preparing a give-away of Petro-Canada shares to Canadians, the man behind the stage, chief economic adviser James Gillies, explained why the party is taking such a gamble.

There comes a time in almost every person's life, said the 54-year-old economist, when the familiar, care-free past suddenly appears risky.

Every Canadian knows the scene in countless books and movies where the wise old country doctor tells the high-living hero to stop smoking, stop drinking and slow down. The patient complains at first but meekly accepts the verdict in the end.

Gillies figures it should work the same way for the Tories on election night.

Voters may be griping now about Clark's 18-cent-a-gallon hike in the price of gasoline, but by the end of the campaign they will see it as their most realistic choice, he argued.

Gillies likes the country doctor analogy — all but the no-drinking part, he confessed, with an embarrassed glance at a gin-and-tonic in his hand. And he looks the part. His jacket discarded on an airplane flight and his glasses perpetually slipping down his nose, the rumpled economics professor launched into his Dr. Jim act.

"Anybody who thinks there is a less painful way than we're advocating to tackle this country's economic problems is simply living in a fool's paradise."

This doctor doesn't go in for wonder drugs or miracle cures. And deep down, he is convinced, neither do most Canadians.

"People are aware we're falling further and further into amorass. They know our economy has been operating at something less than optimum for a long time. They're aware of what's happening in Iran and around the world and they know it means we've got to consume less."

A large excise tax on gasoline is the fastest, surest way of reducing consumption, Gillies said. He bases his blief on recent studies in the United States which show that citizens south of the border are using less energy in response to higher gas prices. There are clear statistics to show that Americans are buying smaller cars and driving less.

Gillies shrugs off the examples of Germany, France and Japan where $3-plus a gallon gasoline appears to have little impact on driving habits.

"This is North America we're talking about."

The Tories are firmly convinced that Canadians will respond well to more expensive gasoline by switching to public transit and cutting back on their necessary car trips.

Reaction to their Dec. 11 budget was ample evidence of this, Gillies said. Tory opinion watchers carefully monitored community response to Finance Minister John Crosbie's tough economic package and the observers liked what they saw.

History, too, was on the Tories' side.

Said Gillies: "I'm not worried about the Canadian people understanding our policy. They'll see the facts of the situation and respond to the challenge just as they responded to the challenge of the Second World War."

Rhino Party charges again

VANCOUVER (CP) — Richard the Troll is having a little trouble with the law but, other than that, the Rhinoceros Party is entering the federal election more alive and well than ever.

At a news conference Friday during which the lights kept going out ("we've kept this country in the dark too long") he and some Rhino candidates pledged to bring in a "genuine era of incompetence."

But the Troll, otherwise known as 35-year-old hashish pipemaker Richard Schaller, won't be a candidate Feb. 18 because he's "still running in the last election."

By that he means he's having a problem with the Canada Elections Act.

Schaller overlooked the requirement to file an election expenses return after he run for the Rhinoceros party in Capilano riding last May. He was recently charged with this offence and must appear in court Jan. 4 to set a date for trial.

Schaller is a little vague about his expenses — they were either $3,200 or $2,300 — but he said he kept well within his $3.5 million budget.

Legal problems won't keep him out of the election. Even though he won't be a candidate he's been appointed western caucus chairman and plans to make frequent national policy statements.

"We went to the electorate last time with a promise to keep none of our promises and Prime Minister Joe Clark lifted that policy right off our platform," Schaller said. "That's political plagiarism of unparalleled proportions."

On a platform decorated with rhinceros pictures, national campaign chairman Charles Mackenzie (wearing an African pith helmet) announced that the party plans to run a full slate of candidates in this election.

He said it already has 137 candidates "showing interest" including 12 in B.C., 70 in Quebec and 23 in Ontario.

In the last election the party ran 64 candidates, collected about 63,000 votes but elected no members.

Introduced at the news conference were Albert (the Cad) Courchene who will run in Surrey-White Rock and Randy Dandy Little who will run in Vancouver East.

The candidates, heavy on false noses, frizzy hair and marijuana buttons, promised to be ridiculous and provide lots of fun.

Mackenzie said the party will campaign on non-issues because everyone else is campaigning on issues. But he did drop a few hints about Rhino policy.

He said Petro-Canada should be "sold in every corner grocery store" and the Rhinos promise to give five free cans of pork and beans to every Canadian citizen.

The Rhinos suggest that the Shah of Iran should be smuggled into Canada and appointed to the Senate — "and once there he will disappear from sight for ever."

Ordinary joes irked by PM Joe

OTTAWA (CP) — Ordinary "joes" are being bumped out of their Air Canada seats by Prime Minister Clark's election campaign and, although the airline is making alternative arrangements for them, some inconvenienced Christmas travellers aren't pleased.

Air Canada cancelled five daily return trips to Toronto this week when it turned a DC-9 over to the Progressive Conservatives for campaigning.

"I think it's disgusting that politicians should get first priority after I booked well in advance," said one Ottawa woman who lost her seat to the politicians.

The New Democratic Party also chartered a DC-9 this week, but no flights were cancelled as a result. The Liberals asked for a DC-9 to fly to Winnipeg Thursday, but Air Canada chartered a plane through another airline.

Petrocan giveaway faces problems

OTTAWA (CP) — Petro-Canada would face expensive logistic problems if it had to deal with 15 million shareholders, says David Helliwell, president of the British Columbia Resources Investment Corp.

The corporation was a model for a Progressive Conservative proposal to get rid of shares in Petro-Canada, the state-owned oil company.

Helliwell said in a telephone interview from Vancouver Friday that the Tory intention of attracting 15 million shareholders is "a laudable but expensive objective" because Petro-Canada would be required by law to send annual reports and other notices to all shareholders.

Michael Wilson, minister of state for international trade who headed a cabinet study of what to do with Petro-Canada, admitted the share giveaway and sale would create logistic problems.

"But we don't feel they will be anything that can't be cleared up."

Wilson said he could not estimate what it would cost to hand out Petro-Canada shares. But he said it would cost less per share than distributing BCRIC shares because Petro-Canada would have access to government tax lists to reach potential shareholders and for checking identifications.

Petro-Canada, however, would be trying to reach almost ten times as many shareholders as BCRIC.

Wilson said, among other things, it has not yet been decided who would underwrite the potentially-massive share sale.

Strike victims must pay

IRA takes credit for rash of letter bombs in Britain

LONDON (AP) — The Irish Republican Army has claimed responsibility for the Christmas blitz of letter bombs addressed to prominent Britons.

Meanwhile, Scotland Yard admits it faces "almost insurmountable" odds in trying to track down those sending the explosive Christmas gifts.

A man who said he spoke for the IRA called the Dublin office of the British Broadcasting Corp. late Friday and said the IRA is behind the barrage of letter bombs that began arriving in Britain earlier this week.

The caller, who gave a secret code name frequently used by the IRA in the past, said the campaign was planned to spotlight what he called the inhumane treatment of those at Northern Ireland's Maze Prison, where IRA guerrillas and Protestant extremists are held.

So far, all the bombs have been mailed from Belgium. Two Scotland Yard detectives were sent to Brussels on Friday in a bid to track down the senders.

But Scotland Yard spokesman Tony Diggins conceded police had very few clues to go on, and said the task of finding those responsible "seems almost insurmountable."

Police have speculated the IRA launched the blitz in retaliation for a roundup of 25 IRA suspects in Britain last week.

Five of the bombs received so far have been addressed to prominent businessmen, a sixth exploded injuring two postal workers and leaving no trace of an address.

Officials said Friday that letter bombs seven and eight had arrived and that for the first time a British cabinet minister — Employment Secretary James Prior — was one of the recipients. The bomb addressed to Prior was discovered by a mail sortered.

Jennifer Lloyd, the wife of prominent British banker Richard Lloyd discovered the other bomb after it arrived at the couple's suburban London home. Police said it carried enough explosives to cripple a man.

Mrs. Lloyd, the fourth sharp-eyed wife to pick out a terror bomb from the morning mail, said she had seen a television program about the bombings the night before a Belgian-stamped, hand-addressed manila envelope arrived for her husband in the mail.

"I became suspicious when I saw it had a Brussels postmark and a customs declaration label saying it contained soap," she said. She put the package in a garden urn and called police.

Chinese defy Vatican, instal own bishop

PEKING (UPI) — Ignoring warnings from the Vatican, China's independent Catholic Church Friday installed a new bishop for its Peking diocese in a two-hour Latin language rite in a crowded cathedral.

Newly consecrated Bishop Michael Fu Tieshan, 48, vowed in the ceremony to "abide by the teachings of Jesus Christ, uphold the independence of the Chinese Catholic Church, and work actively for the prosperity of the motherland."

The Vatican warned in advance it would not recognize Fu's election as bishop by the clergy and laymen of the Chinese Patriotic Catholic Association, as the church in China is called.

Chinese Catholics severed their ties with the Vatican at the time of the Communist revolution. Their spokesmen say there will be no reconciliation until the Vatican ends its diplomatic relations with the rival Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan.

The official Xinhua News Agency said 700 worshipers crowded into the cathedral of St. Mary of the Immaculate Conception, the only Catholic church currently open in Peking.

A chorus sang the service in Latin, still used in the Chinese church, which has not adopted Vatican reforms. Many of the worshipers were in their 20s.

Fu said he also would "promote relations of friendship between Chinese clergymen and believers, and their brothers and sisters in other countries, on the basis of quality and principle of mutual respect for each other's independence."

Cancer fighter?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mistletoe may become an effective cancer-fighting drug, a pathology professor says.

Dr. Tasneem Khwaja of the University of Southern California School of Medicine said Friday that European scientists recently have found that toxic proteins in the plant stopped cancer cells from growing in the breast, colon, stomach, rectum and cervix.

Khwaja's own research on Korean mistletoe shows the cancer-fighting ability of the plant stems from chemical compounds containing nitrogen that stimulate the body's immunity system.

Author Farquharson/Harron . . . remember Sam Yell an' the profits?

CHARLIE SAYS IT'S GOSPEL

Was 'creeayshun' really like this?

By DEREK SIDENIUS

It's Charlie at his best in what's maybe his best book.

From the creeayshun in Jennysez through to the doins of Joaner, Charlie tells the old, familiar stories in his rich Parry Sound, never-mine-the-spellin' manner.

In it you meet all the great Biblical characters — Sam Yell and Dan Yell (no relation), Nabakidnestor and Moeziz, and a hole bunch of profits, too.

"A profit," says Charlie "is sumbuddy who gets up on a high place and looks down on everybuddy elts. No matter what their name is, everyone of them profits seems to tell the people the same thing: YER DOIN' IT ALL RONG."

Well, one thing is certain Charlie hasn't dun rong with this book. And it's made his cree-ate-or plenty of profits of another kind.

The book came out 15 months ago and sales are fast approaching the 100,000 mark.

So popular is it with book dealers, Harron was asked by his publisher, Gage, to do what few other authors would dare to try to get away with. He was pressed into a week-long autograph circuit through Western Canada plugging the same book for the second year in a row.

That's rare in the book plugging business.

But judging by the number of people who lined up to get their copies here in Victoria, Charlie's second coming was justified.

It was Charlie's first appearance in Victoria in three years. The last time was to promote his Jogfree of Canda, the Whirld and Other Places.

All told he's written four books now — History of Canda and K.O.R.N. Allmynack being the other two.

Collectively, his books have sold half a million copies.

In a brief interview Harron said he was initially apprehensive about how the public would receive Charlie's Old Testament.

He got some flak from book sellers but that quickly vanished when they discovered the facts as related by Charlie are identical to those in the Bible.

There's a serious side to the book, too, he added.

"Young people have got away from reading the Bible. They don't go to Sunday School any more. They miss all the great stories. But those stories are important to understand where we came from. And if you don't know them, you can't hope to ever appreciate the great literary masters such as Shakespeare or Milton."

Like the days of yore, long before TV or radio, Charlie's re-telling is meant to be read aloud, savored bit by bit. Hopefully, said Harron, it will whet the appetite for deeper study of the real McCoy.

Harron said that in his first visit to Victoria the people he met were more interested in Charlie than the man behind the whiskers and crumpled hat.

Now the tables have turned. People are asking Charlie about Don Harron.

That's mostly due to Harron's success as host of CBC radio's popular Morningside show.

The show has the biggest audience of any CBC program — more than one million Canadians tune in each week-day.

The success has spawned a fifth book — Harronside — which is due to be released next fall.

The book will contain extracts from his show but is largely autobiographical, a big departure in writing style for Harron.

But Charlie's pen and wit is far from running dry.

"Would you give up a gold mine?" Harron asked as he strode through the wind and the rain to his car.

Very soon we will celebrate not only the birth of a new year but of a new decade — maybe a new time in our lives.

But, what will the '80s bring us, except perhaps another dose of Joe Who? Dwindling oil supplies?

Vacations in space while we on earth won't be able to afford to drive to work? Even worse global starvation?

Or, hopefully, concerted efforts and successes in balancing these inequities?

No doubt, there will be much that is new to us in the forthcoming first year of the next decade.

But there should also be an attempt to take with us some of the best things of the '70s to make sure what was right about them continues.

Such as, maybe, the concept of the International Year of the Child.

That year is now rapidly running out. The Victoria IYC Projects Committee has only to hold its evaluation meeting and then submit its report to the national body.

And that just about wraps things up for the International Year of the Child.

But does it?

Members of the Victoria committee as well as others whose lives are touched by the rights of children hope that it does not.

They hope that the principles involved, if not all of the projects dreamed up, will go on and that the awareness born in 1979 will not die with the birth of 1980.

The IYC committee here has achieved a lot in its one-year mandate. The list of projects and events undertaken is staggering.

Constance Hawley, executive director of the B.C. Council for the Family and this province's representative on the Canadian Committee for the Year of the Child, describes the Victoria group as probably the best IYC committee in Canada.

Of all the different things they tackled, president Andria Tetlow of the Victoria committee choses three as making the greatest contribution to the International Year of the Child.

"Last January, we had a family festival at Lansdowne Junior High School that attracted more than 1,000 people," she says.

"That was a great experience. Then a youth committee of 15 young people created several projects including a seminar at Pearson College where they met to discuss children's needs and the effects of our economic and social state on the lives of children.

"And lastly, there were the two big mall displays — at Hillside in October and Mayfair in November — that helped make many people more aware of the Year of the Child and of children's needs."

The committee was formed here, Andria says, to make sure Victorians did participate in one way or another.

The president's verdict: "They certainly did. The year has been a tremendous success and I feel that people are much more aware than they've ever been of children's needs, both in the home and outside.

"We anticipate, and indeed we hope, that any programs we've helped to establish will be ongoing."

One of these programs will be committee member David Nordstrom's Growing Together Times for Dads and Kids, which will not only be continued in 1980 but, in fact, expanded.

"I'm part of a group responsible for implementing the B.C. Teachers Federation Invest in Children project," says Nordstrom.

"And, with the B.C. Council for the Family, we plan to duplicate here a program Geoff Potter of Victoria coordinated so successfully in Australia. This will draw people from all over Canada to a week-long seminar on the young person's views on the social and economic aspects of our life."

But this is only a small part of his plans for keeping the projects launched in 1979 going through the '80s.

The rest, he says, he'll unveil once 1980 is under way.

In the meantime, I'm to pass on to you — along with my best wishes for Christmas and onwards — the thought that, as 1979 slowly dies, the Year of the Child is alive and well in Victoria.

New projects hinted for Trident work force

Word from Ottawa that Trident Aircraft Ltd. has been granted a licence to make parts for non-military planes means its 110 employees will be back at work Jan. 2.

Most of the employees were to have be laid off due to lack of government funding.

Derrick Lock, Trident's director of materials, said today McDonnell-Douglas Corp. has indicated it can provide orders for between $1 million and $1.2 million worth of work for up to 10 years if there is assurance Trident will be established on a permanent basis.

In the week starting Jan. 7 officials of Boeing will also be in Sidney to inspect the Trident plant and Canadian military officials will visit Jan. 11.

Lock said the McDonnell-Douglas orders alone could provide steady work for between 15 and 20 people.

"But no company will place orders if there is any uncertainty about the future of Trident."

Lock said Trident now is the only company west of Toronto with a licence to make airplane parts.

But the licence will be of no value unless funding is secured early in the new year.

"We don't need instant cash but we must have a firm guarantee of financial support. That is vital."

Trident has received grants from both Ottawa and Victoria but says it needs more before the company can go into production.

The federal and provincial governments have been cool to the idea of further grants and it appears each is blaming the other for the decision.

On Friday provincial government officials refuted comments by federal Small Business Minister Ron Huntington that B.C. is the culprit in the financial crisis facing the company.

"The facts of the matter are just not that," said Sandy Peel, deputy minister of economic development.

"At no time in my recollection has the province or the B.C. Development Corporation ever lost faith in Trident," added BCDC chairman Newell Morrison.

Huntington claimed Thursday B.C. wanted to kill the project more than two months ago.

"Now they're trying to hang it all on us so they can come out of it looking good," the minister said.

Ald. Jay Rangel of North Saanich has requested the provincial government to finance Trident at least untill the Feb. 18 federal election.

Rangel said telegrams were sent to Economic and Development Minister Don Phillips and Finance Minister Hugh Curtis requesting interim financial support for the company struggling to keep in business.

"Once the elections are over, the matter can be taken up again with the federal government," Rangel said. "I think it's vitally important for governments to to keep this company alive."

The federal government has so far declined to support the company on the grounds its proposed aircraft, the Trigull, is not economically viable and the company would need further support in future years.

USC needs help

It's been a long hard haul for the Unitarian Service Committee's Christmas fund raising campaign this past week and there's still a way to go.

The fund — the target is $35,000 — now sits at $19,420.85.

As the Christmas carols grow louder and the sales pitches grow more strident, try to remember the millions of children in the world who are starving.

See donations to date on Page 19.

Donations may be made at the Times business office or sent to the Victoria Times, Post Office Box 300, Victoria, V8W 2N4 — or left at any branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Cheques should be made payable to the Unitarian Service Committee.

200-mile limit 'unconstitutional'

A lawyer argued Friday in B.C. Supreme Court in Victoria that Canada's 200-mile fishing limit declared by Parliament in 1977 is unconstitutional and beyond its powers.

Robert Higinbotham, who was assisted by Alan Milne, said even if Parliament did have the authority, it did not exercise it sufficiently.

Their provincial court trial in Vancouver has been stalled pending the Supreme Court decision.

Higinbotham, representing Wallace Edward Gordon 12 miles from land and the fishing zone is 200 miles out.

The Americans were beyond the 12-mile limit and he argued that the fishing occurred on the high seas.

Mr. Justice Kenneth Meredith reserved decision and gave no indication when his judgment will be delivered.

Higinbotham said the Geneva Convention on the High Seas, in a declaratory opinion, said the term high seas includes all seas which are of San Diego, skipper of one of the 11 American boats arrested for fishing within the 200-mile limit, said the territorial sea of Canada is not territorial, no state may subject any part of them to its sovereignty, and there was freedom of navigation and freedom of fishing.

Canada had violated international law by passing the Fisheries Protection Act.

What had happened, he said, was really a dispute between Canada and the U.S. and should be heard by the international court at The Hague in the Netherlands.

If Parliament did have the authority to pass the legislation, under which the 200-mile limit regulation was passed, he argued that the provicial court has no jurisdiction to try the offence.

He asked Meredith to issue an order prohibiting provincial court Judge Kerry Smith, or any other judge, from holding a trial of the 11 American tuna fishermen.

Mary Jane Dodge, counsel for the attorney-general of Canada, said Canada has not signed the Geneva high seas convention.

She also said the territorial seas convention hadn't been signed by Canada, but Higinbotham said it had.

She said the application for a writ of prohibition was inappropriate and the action should be by appeal.

Judge Smith exercised his jurisdiction and it was not open for Justice Meredith to act as an appellate tribunal, she said.

If she was wrong on that point, she said, there was a constitutional issue and she argued that Canada does have the right to extend its legislative jurisdiction as it did in the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

When Meredith asked if Canada can unilaterally take over the oceans, she said Canada could and domestic courts are bound to follow the legislation if it is clear and unambiguous even if it is in conflict with international law.

Quoting previous legal decisions, she said domestic law must prevail and national sovereignty is not subject to international sovereignty.

But she said her major point is that the law in question is constitutionally valid, is clear and unambiguous, and must [illegible] courts.

She noted that the U.S. passed the Fisheries Conservation Act in 1976 establishing a 200-mile zone and prohibiting foreigners fishing without authorization and that Canada's 200-mile limit is compatible not only with the U.S. law but with many countries which have enacted 200-mile zones.

Book now for a splendid coach tour abroad . . .

We learned from Paulin's this week that they now have many of the 1980 brochures for coach tours of Britain and Europe . . . These include Frames, Global, Cosmos, Eastern Scottish and Thomas Cook, among others . . . Tours that take you absolutely everywhere you could possibly want to go in the British Isles as well as other parts of Europe . . . These are all such good tours that you can rely on . . . We've been told over and over again by friends who've taken various tours of this nature abroad how very delighted they were . . . and how they got to do and see far more than they'd ever have been able to accomplish on their own . . . for less money, and with never a care in the world! . . . Most of these coach tours originate in London, though some are out of other cities . . . And of course since next year is the year of the Passion Play in Oberammergau, most of the tour companies will have departures which include this . . . We've just been looking over a Cosmos brochure to continental Europe which includes Oberammergau, which can be joined in Brussels if one doesn't want to leave from London . . . Anyway, if you're thinking of something like this for next year you should be getting busy now . . . Drop in and have a chat with Paulin's . . . they'll give you full information. And while the air prices for trans-Atlantic charters are not out yet, departure dates ARE . . . and Paulin's can book you on Air Canada or register you on a Wardair flight . . . As well as book you for one of these British and European coach tours! . . . Paulin Travel, 532 Broughton St., 382-9168.

Tummy turmoil? Try a Bear Paw

TORONTO (CP) — Holidays and hangovers usually go hand in hand and many bartenders agree the only cure is not to drink.

But, if you decide to overindulge, Chet Obacz, an instructor at the Toronto Bartenders Training School, said that two drops of Angostura bitters in a glass of soda water at room temperature can ease a hangover "a bit."

He said if you haven't got the bitters, pour an ounce of brandy into a glass of soda water. It will do the same thing to ease your gurgling stomach.

Or what about a drink containing zedoary, cinchone, calumba and bryonia? Jim White, food writer for Toronto Star, said he learned about the drink Fernet-Branca from a New York barman and said that it can cure the nastiest hangover.

Fernet-Branca is actually a bitter Italian apertif, a stimulant for the appetite, White says.

The tonic contains the extracts of more than a dozen spices, roots and barks swirled in a mixture that is 39 per cent alcohol by volume.

A 750-millilitre bottle sells for about $17 and White said it "will take you through 26 nights or hangovers, whichever comes first."

Les Szabo, a Toronto barman, said he prefers to put 20 dashes of Angostura bitters in soda water.

"You have to make the drink dark," he said. "Drink it down all at once."

Anders Synnerdahl, keeper of a British pub in nearby Mississauga, said that in Sweden he used to make pub crawlers a Bear Paw to chase away tummy turmoil.

"It's a mixture of lingonberry juice and vodka," Synnerdahl said. If you can't find the lingonberry, substitute cranberry juice.

He also said that a heavy Irish stout, such as Beamish, drunk the morning after the night before may help settle your stomach.

A favorite remedy of bartender Alan Contant is a three-quarter glass of beer, preferably draft, and one-quarter glass of tomato juice.

Contant's wilder concoctions for curing hangovers are, he said, time-tested. The Midnight Cowboy is a rich mixture that will coat your stomach.

Mix one ounce Tia Maria, three ounces of 18 per cent cream and one-quarter ounce of rum.

Other so-called cures: Take two aspirins before you go to sleep; drink a flat cola the next morning; drink six ounces of olive oil before you go drinking or take a cold and sinus pain killer before retiring.

Best advice of all said White: "Go out, have a good time and don't drink so much that you've got to engage in any of this curative craziness."

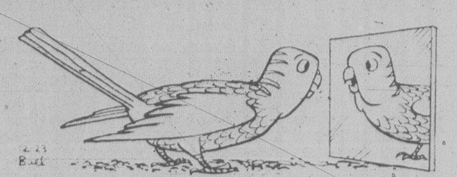
This bird sure likes himself



By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dear Dr. Miller: I wonder if I made a mistake. I gave Valentino, my parakeet, a mirror. Now instead of watching and chatting with me all the time, he's got his beak glued to the mirror staring at it and muttering to himself. He's really becoming a very boring bird. I suppose if I took the mirror away from him now he'd hate me? — H.McK.

Dear H. McK.: It's worth the risk. Chances are he wouldn't hold a grudge long, anyway. You might consider giving him the mirror back only when you're going to be gone for awhile. That way he couldn't possibly be lonely. He would have the best possible company . . .

Dear Dr. Miller: Do dogs ever get muscular dystrophy like humans? — O.R.

Dear O.R.: Yes, older dogs in particular do occasionally develop a type of muscular dystrophy similar to that in humans.

The cause, so far, is unknown. The muscles become progressively weaker and smaller. The patient can be kept comfortable, but there is no cure.

Dear Dr. Miller: How long does it take a new kitten to settle down and start being friendly, for heaven sakes? Scooter here is a little doll, but he's also a devil. We can't get close to him? He's gotten used to us enough now so he'll eat in front of us, but somehow he's not at all affectionate. He spits and backs away when we try to pet him. Oh my, you should have seen my poor husband's hand when he tried to pick him up. This is a three-pound tiger, believe you me! Why is he so standoffish? What's wrong with Scooter anyway? He's the first kitten I've ever seen that wasn't cuddly and lovable, at least part of the time. — R.R.

Dear R.R.: Scrappy Scooter's socialization or lack of it, is probably the problem.

Your veterinarian should check him out (if you can coax him into a carrier) just to be sure his mean demeanor is not the result of some physical problem. More likely, though, Scooter simply wasn't exposed to humans during that second critical month when he normally would have learned to accept and appreciate them. A kitten (or for that matter a puppy) who isn't able to interact with a human during that vital period may never be able to make up for it completely and develop a normal pet-owner relationship. If that is his problem, Scooter may still come around eventually to some degree, but he would never be able to become a typical trusting, highly desirable home companion.

Dear Dr. Miller: On my last attempt with my dwarf cichlids, I moved out the adult fish but lost the eggs to what appeared to be a fungus. Is there some chemical I can use to stop the fungus from developing that wouldn't hurt the eggs? — V.J.

Dear V.J.: One approach is to add enough drops of methylene blue to the water to produce a uniform deep blue color. If this mythylene blue has not completely dissipated by the time the fry are free swimming, it should be removed by filtration or partial water changes.

KNIT & CHAT

by MAY E. MacLEAN

Just this past week I had a frantic telephone call from a lady who was knitting an angora bonnet for her granddaughter and who was at her wit's end!

As she explained it, first she got an itchy nose, then a runny nose, and now she feels it has developed into a full cold, as she had resorted to knitting without heat because someone had told her it would lessen the chances of the angora hair bothering her nose.

I must admit that I have heard of this problem before, but not such an extreme case. Most people do not experience any discomfort when working with angora or mohair, other than a few stray hairs sticking to your clothing. However, there is always trouble if you should be allergic to fur. As I have said, it usually is only just a mild irritation to just a few.

The problem is what to do if you are experiencing such unpleasantness as the lady describes. Well, try not to disturb the yarn too much during the actual knitting, in other words, handle gently. You might try putting the ball into a plastic bag and having an elastic band around the top of the bag, allowing only the strand of the yarn to be pulled through as you are knitting.

If the problem is really serious, I suppose a sort of surgical mask can be worn while you are knitting. You might look strange, but it would be effective in preventing the tiny hairs of the angora from entering your nostrils!

I have heard that keeping your knitting in the refrigerator will lessen the chances of the hairs flying around. And another suggestion I read somewhere was to spray the knitting and wool with a non-sticky hair spray. I must say, I would be very careful of the last suggestion unless you are absolutely certain that this will not discolor the wool in any way. I know that some hair sprays are advertised as non-sticky, "yet hold". Perhaps you could try it out on a sample piece first.

Raspberry and coral pink were used on this charming crochet pillow top, mounted over a pale ecru satin making it one of the most unusual pillows that I have seen. Of course you can make it in any colors you wish to suit your own decor, for it would look equally at home either in the living room or bedroom. It could also be used as a centrepiece for a table.

To order Leaflet No. 7680 send 75 cents plus a stamped self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have a stamp or envelope, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of handling. Send to: May E. MacLean, Knit & Chat, 486 Montford Drive, Dollard des Ormeaux, Roxboro, Quebec, H9G 1M6.

Police crack a lock puzzle

Ottawa police got their kicks out of torturing innocent locks

OTTAWA (CP) - Home house break-ins and vandalism seem to be on the increase, but simply locking your doors isn't going to discourage a determined thief or vandal, say Ottawa police.

S/Sgt. Bob Kelly recently supervised a kick-test of several kinds of door locks to prove that cheaper is sometimes better.

The test showed that a rim-type style of lock stands up to abuse better than the more expensive dead-bolt type of lock.

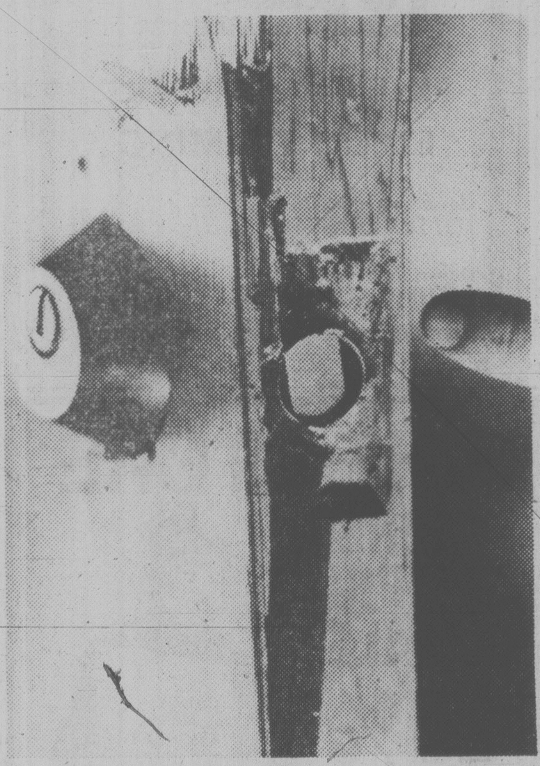
To make the lock even better, Kelly said, the cylinder of the lock, which can be picked, can be replaced with one that is "virtually pick-proof" for about $20.

Kelly said: "We still say a dead-bolt is good and certainly don't recommend that people who have them replace them, but if a new lock is needed we suggest this type.

The lock that performed the best in the police kick-test was the Jimmy-Proof Cylinder Rim Lock, made by Dominion Lock and retailing at about $12.

It survived 13 well-placed kicks without giving in.

ISRAELI-DESIGNED lock that police say can't be kicked in sells for about $175 installed. Several Arab embassies have them installed on their own doors.



THIS LOCK failed to survive the punishing kick-test dished out by Ottawa police.

Settle for two sons

Dear Abby:

I need an objective view of a complicated problem. My husband and I recently had our second child — a healthy baby boy. We wanted a little girl because we already had a boy, so, of course, we were very disappointed.

Now I want to try for a girl, but my husband is opposed to the idea. He says two children are enough for the time being, but maybe later on, if we still want a third, he'd consider it.

Well, I'm 30 and have an infertility problem which gets worse as time goes on, so I think if we're going to try for a girl we'd better do it now.

Also figuring in our decision is the fact that my husband and I are both extremely tall and quite plain-looking — even homely — and if we were to have a daughter and she inherited our worst physical features it would break my heart. ERA and women's lib notwithstanding, a woman makes it or breaks it on her looks, Abby.

Please help me make the right decision. My heart says to have one more child, but my head says forget it.

C.N.

Dear C.:

Listen to your head. If you'd be heartbroken with a tall, plain-looking (even homely) daughter, you'd be wise to settle for two sons.

Dear Abby:

The letter signed Been Through a Lot from a 15-year-old girl who thought she had VD has prompted this letter. She said she suffered in silence for weeks, then finally decided to tell her mother, even though her friends said she was crazy to tell her Mom. She wrote to say that telling her mother was the wisest decision she ever made.

My story is a little different. I'm an 18-year-old girl who was into drugs and sex. Last June I discovered I was pregnant. I was scared and confused, but I told my parents. Not only did I tell them about being pregnant, I told them about the drugs, lies, drinking, etc. They were hurt and upset, but their main concern was my welfare. I decided to have an abortion. It was MY decision.

My Mom and I went away for a little while afterwards to help me forget. While I was away I met and fell in love with a wonderful young man. I was honest with him, and he was understanding, loving and forgiving. I also prayed to God for strength and forgiveness. Now I can sleep nights.

Thank you Mom, Dad, my fiance, and God. And thank you, Abby, for listening.

Also Learned

Dear Learned:

And thank you for assuring young people that in time of trouble their parents are their best friends.

Dear Abby:

We, the participants of the Long Beach Senior Day Centre, feel as you do that flowers should be given to the living. We think this poem expresses our feelings well:

'I would rather have a little rose from the garden of a friend,
Than flowers strewn around my casket when my days on earth must end.
I would rather have a living smile from one I know is true,
Than tears shed 'round my casket when this world I bid adieu.
Bring me all the flowers today whether pink or white or red,
I would rather have one blossom now than a truckload when I am dead.'

Participants

Dear Participants:

Thanks for a poem whose author speaks for many. Does anyone out there know who wrote it?

Dear Abby:

I have no problems to write about today.
I have not just divorced; nobody passed away.
My blender's not broken; there's been no fire,
My washer is fine. And so is my dryer.
My love life is fine, my son is still eating.
I just wrote this poem to wish you
Season's Greetings!

Faithful Fan

Weight is often the key in high blood pressure

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I have noticed that my friends who have high blood pressure seem to be terribly overweight. Is there a relationship between being fat and high blood pressure? Do thin people get it, too?

Mrs. E.S.

Dear Mrs. S.:

This question has interested physicians and scientists for a long time. Very recently, an important research project confirmed the relationship between high blood pressure and bodily bulk.

Many studies, in fact, indicate that overweight is the most significant factor in producing high blood pressure. Age, financial troubles, cigarette smoking, high cholesterol levels in the blood and emotional stress are also reported to be of great significance in the production and maintenance of high blood pressure.

I once reported an interesting study that shows that South Americans who live in the mountains have lower blood pressure than their countrymen who live at the seashore. At first it was thought that the altitude made the difference. Apparently, this was not so. The answer seemed to lie in the fact that those who live in the mountains were smaller in size and generally lighter in weight.

Since there are so many factors responsible, in addition to overweight, even thin people should be aware that blood pressure must be checked and, if high, must be controlled.

Dear Doctor:

My family all swim in an indoor pool. It reeks with the smell of chlorine, especially when we first get there. Before long, the odor seems to disappear, yet I wonder if the chlorine can be harmful. So far, none of us has had any adverse effects.

Mrs. H.M.

Dear Mrs. M.:

Despite the heavy odor that is present in a pool area, the concentration of chlorine is very light. The temporary unpleasant odor is compensated for by the protection it offers the swimmers.

There is no real danger associated with chlorinated water. In rare instances, there may be an allergic skin reaction. Irritation of the eyes due to the chlorine is temporary and does no harm.

A brisk shower with fresh water after swimming will wash off any of the chlorine salts that may have precipitated on the skin surface. You can be certain that health officials would not sanction the use of chlorine in swimming pools if it presented any real threat to health.

SPEAKING OF YOUR HEALTH... Why do so many people with a hearing defect always accuse other people of mumbling? "Mumblers" in the family should gently suggest hearing examinations.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him care of The Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N8.

U.K. marriage, divorce up

LONDON (UPI) — Living in sin is becoming less popular in Britain, a government report said today. Although marriage seems to be coming back into favor, divorce is also becoming more popular.

A survey by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys said the number of marriages went up last year after falling every year since 1972.

Yet Britons are waiting longer before getting married, and waiting longer after getting married to have their first child — an average of 31 months now compared with 17 months in the 1960s, the report said.

Divorce, however, is ending more marriages than ever. The number of divorces went up 11 percent last year, and the younger the bride the more likelihood of divorce, the report said.

"Since 1970 the divorce rate has approximately doubled for ages above 25, but more than trebled for those under 25," it said.

Sunk poisons wash ashore

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight (Reuter) — Officials declared a state of emergency as hundreds of containers of dangerous poisons from a sunken freighter washed up on the beaches of this resort island off the southern coast of England. Local authorities said that since Saturday about 600 containers of mercury-based toxins and other chemicals have been found. The chemicals, driven on to the island's northwest shore by high winds, came from the freighter Aeolian Sky, which sank in 30 metres of water two months ago.

Brannan centre mired

Health Minister Rafe Mair said Friday he doesn't know what to do about the provincial heroin treatment program because of possible lengthy delays in resolving two issues blocking full implementation of the project.

B.C. is appealing a court ruling earlier this year that the province does not have the constitutional authority to operate the program.

That ruling blocked the implementation of the compulsory aspect of the project that would have seen addicts sent to Brannan Lake centre in Nanaimo for three years of treatment.

Today, only volunteers are being treated at Brannan Lake. A full complement of 100 staff is currently treating on;y 40 patients although the centre is designed to work with 150 addicts.

Mair said he expects the final appeal to end up in the Supreme Court of Canada regardless how the B.C. Court of Appeals rules. A final decision could take up to two years.

Meanwhile B.C. had been working with federal Justice Minister Jacques Flynn "with the hope the federal government would either pass legislation or would in other ways assist us in making the compulsory program work," Mair said.

"As you know, the reason we lost the court case was on constitutional grounds."

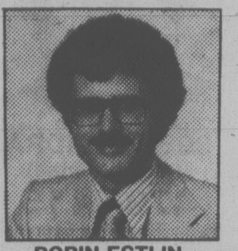
But with the fall of the federal government last week, hope for early support from Ottawa has fallen through.

"We're not going to be able to deal with the federal government until summer depending on who gets in," Mair said.

"I haven't got any ideas at this point. I'm just distressed that the program is heading along like a headless horseman."

Mair did say he wants to get a policy going on the heroin program within the next three or four months.

"In other words it's not something I'm prepared to let drift along."



TO ALL OUR FRIENDS . . .

We wish to one and all the joy of this festive season, with a New Year of peace and prosperity, harmony and love.

Security overrides privacy

OTTAWA (CP) — The right of a warden to open the mail of a prisoner when he thinks the security of his institution is threatened was upheld Friday by the Supreme Court of Canada.

In an unanimous judgment, the court said the public interest in maintaining the safety and security of jails overrides the traditional privacy of correspondence between a lawyer and his client.

The issue arose when William (Billy) Solosky, a prisoner at Millhaven asked the court for an order barring warden John Dowsett from opening letters between himself and his lawyer.

Decisive court victory for Keable

MONTREAL (CP) — The Keable inquiry into police wrongdoing in Quebec won a decisive court victory Friday that will allow it to pursue an investigation of police informers and agents provocateurs in the terrorist Front de Liberation du Quebec in the early 1970s.

The chief justice of Quebec Superior Court, in a toughly-worded ruling, warned that granting Montreal police officers immunity from the government-ordered inquiry would be the first step towards creating a "state within a state."

Mr. Justice Jules Deschenes firmly rejected police arguments that policemen were only answerable before the criminal law, the courts and their superiors — not the Quebec justice department or Commissioner Jean Keable.

This was a touchstone in his decision to deny the police department's petition for a court order declaring the inquiry unconstitutional — or, at least, preventing it from seeking evidence about police informers — and dismissing Keable as commissioner.

The case arose Nov. 27, when Keable's publicly denounced an alleged police informer, Francois Seguin, and then attempted to force a Montreal anti-terrorist officer, Det.-Sgt. Emile Bisaillon, to testify about his relations with Seguin.

Bisaillon and the Montreal police department immediately went to court to block any testimony on the subject as well as to quash a commission subpoena for police files on Seguin and tape recordings of a private conversation between Seguin, Bisaillon and inquiry lawyers.

Justice Deschenes undercut the entire police case, ruling the Quebec government had decided the "public interest" required the inquiry to delve into the recruitment of police informers and the drafting of FLQ communiques.

Choirs ring in Christmas cheer

Lieutenant-Governor Henry Bell-Irving will read the final lesson Sunday night at Christ Church Anglican Cathedral when the traditional nine lessons and carols service is held. The service begins at 7:30 p.m.

Church chronicles

The ever popular Festival of Nine Lessons and Christmas Carols will also be held in St. John's Church, 1611 Quadra Street, on Sunday beginning at 7 p.m. The reading of the nine lessons and the singing of the Christmas music tell the story in word and song of the Old Testament prophecy of the coming of Christ as also recorded in the New Testament.

This year the readers of the lessons are representative of the many forms of ministry which take place in St. John's church during the course of the year. Various groups which have programs in the community have their organizational work and committee work in St. John's premises.

Among the groups to be represented are Amnesty International, B.C. Council for the Family, Inter-Church Committee of World Development Education, Single Parents Resource Centre, Parents in Crisis, St. John's Refugee Boat People Services, the Upper Room Society and Youth Ministries.

Canon Robert MacRae says everyone is welcome.

A traditional service of lessons and carols, made popular at King's College, Cambridge, will be held in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Douglas at Broughton, Sunday at 7 p.m. Organist and choirmaster is Rupert Lang and soloists will be Valerie Archibald, David Auld, John Bell, Hazel Carlson, Teresa Hunter, Kaaren Patterson and Susan Proudman.

This year the Christmas Eve celebrations in Knox Church, 2964 Richmond, will take the form of a play and pageant at 7 p.m. The church school pupils will present The Stained Glass Window, directed by Heather Smith, assisted by the church school staff and Christian education committee. At 11 p.m. a candlelight service with communion will be observed.

A Christmas Eve service in pageantry, light and song will be presented at Metropolitan United Church at 11 p.m.

Under the direction of Alan Jones, the traditional story of the nativity will unfold as angels, shepherds and wise men visit the Holy Family, bearing their gifts of song, worship and commitment.

The sanctuary choir under the direction of Kelly Charlton and the organist, Ursula Thomas, provide the musical setting for this breathtaking experience of the coming of God's son into the world of humanity and the dispelling of darkness with the infusion of light.

Emmanuel Baptist Church will present Christmas Alive, a live outdoor nativity pageant, tonight, 6 to 9 p.m., Sunday, 5 to 7 p.m. and Monday, 8 to 11 p.m.

The program, with Mary, Joseph, shepherds, angels and the three wise men in adoration of the baby Jesus, is a loving and realistic way of sharing the good news of 2,000 years ago with those who may not fully realize the true meaning of Christmas.

Hot chocolate, coffee and cookies will be served each night to ease the winter chill. Christmas carols will be sung by the Emmanuel Youth Chorus on Sunday evening. Everyone is invited.

Many area churches use theatrical techniques to tell the Bible story of Christ's birth. Here are two.

LEFT: The Christmas pageant at St. John's Anglican Church, 1611 Quadra, will present the story with a background focus on the Old Testament heritage from which the event springs. The magic of Christmas unfolds in pageantry and song in a spectacular and moving drama with a cast of more than 50.

The cast is inter-generational, with both adults and children participating. Characters of the Old and New Testaments set the nativity in the context of the increasing revelation of the scriptures, says Canon Robert MacRae, rector of St. John's.

Director is Barbara Meiklejohn and the music is under the direction of Heather Crook. The play is based on a script developed by Dean Herbert O'Driscoll of Christ Church Cathedral, Vancouver.

This pageant is presented on Christmas eve, Monday, at 6:30 p.m. in St. John's Church. All are welcome, says MacRae, especially children, young people and everyone who is "young at heart."

ABOVE: An original puppet theatre presentation will be sandwiched between the 9:30 a.m. Christian family nurture service and a party at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, 1701 Elgin in Oak Bay Sunday.

Four St. Mary's teenagers will present The First Christmas is Every Christmas, an original script by the Rev. Marlowe Anderson, director of the production.

The story tells of four of the animals gathered by the stable on the first Christmas morning trying to decide what gifts would be appropriate for the newborn Babe. The script features music, poetry and dialogue as the animals—Diggy, Philip Fox, Peter Panda and Terry Tiger—discuss their choices with the Christmas angel.

Christian Village plans varied winter courses

Vancouver Island Christian Village has prepared a selection of courses for its winter and spring semester.

Beginning Jan. 8, five nine-week courses will be offered, with both morning and evening times available.

Jones, a highly-qualified Christian counsellor and teacher from Washington, will also give a special course on dealing with attitudes, guilt, self-esteem, and marriage relationships.

Beginning April 8, further courses will be offered, six weeks in length, on Kingdom Living, Praise and Worship in Song, and other selected topics.

These will be instructed by Esther Bennett and Sharon Pryor, who will have returned from a four-month trip around the world, ministering in many locations.

The site for all village classes will be Queenswood House of Studies, 2494 Arbutus. Information on course brochures, available from the Christian Bookroom (631 Johnson St.), Logos Bookstore (1565 McKenzie) or by calling 598-7372.

Perspectives

By J.A. DAVIDSON

In the Christmas story as it is given in Luke's Gospel, the shepherds who had been watching their flocks by night are surprised to hear the angel announcing the birth of the Saviour. They say to one another, "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which has come to pass which the Lord hath made known to us." That is how it is given in the King James version.

A few years ago a classical scholar in England, Dr. E. V. Rieu, made a translation of the four Gospels for Penguin Books in which he rendered that familiar verse in this way: "Let us go over now to Bethlehem and see this marvel of which the Lord has given us the news." "This marvel": that points up a shade of meaning that is not immediately apparent in the more familiar, "this thing which has come to pass."

We are such a sophisticated, matter-of-fact generation that we haven't much time for marvels—unless they come from laboratories or from big factories and have many wonderful features which last year's rather primitive models didn't have. The Christian faith today, by and large, suffers from a deficiency in sense of marvel, in wonder, in amazement—and we do need to be reminded that marvel and wonder and amazement are essential ingredients of faith.

The marvel that is Christmas is what Christian theology calls "the Incarnation." "Incarnation" means, literally, "en-fleshment," and in Christian usage it designates God's coming into our history in a special way in the person of Jesus. As John's Gospel gives it, "The Word—and the Word was God—was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth." That is the marvel of Christmas; that is the marvel on which the Christian religion is built.

But Christian thinkers through the centuries have not been able to come up with a tidy explanation of the Incarnation. The "proof" of the Incarnation is not found in intellectual speculation; the "proof" is in Christian experience, in awareness of the reality and the love of God in Jesus Christ.

Christians, of course, must bring their minds to bear on the experiences of faith: faith does not ask us to put on intellectual blinders. We get our "proof" of the Incarnation, our assurance of the authenticity of the marvel of Christmas, when we do as the shepherds did, when we come before Jesus Christ in awe and adoration. Then the mystery of it dissolves, then the marvel is lighted for us.

The mystery of the Incarnation is resolved for us as we walk the way of faith. We do not come to easy answers or pat explanations—but we do come to awareness of the reality of the Incarnation. The late William Barclay, a Scottish New Testament scholar, put the matter in this way: "The mode of the Incarnation may be a dark mystery; the fact of the Incarnation is a blazing certainty."

"Let us go over now to Bethlehem and see this marvel of which the Lord has given us the news."

(Dr. Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Guest soloist returns

Chris Hansen Monson is making an impact upon the Christian World as a recording artist and soloist. She will appear in concert Sunday, Dec. 30 at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., also Monday, Dec. 31 at 9:30 p.m., at Glad Tidings Church, 842 North Park.

Chris was raised in Arlington, Wash., and lives in Seattle where she attends Calvary Temple.

Pastor E. E. Austin invites the public to attend.

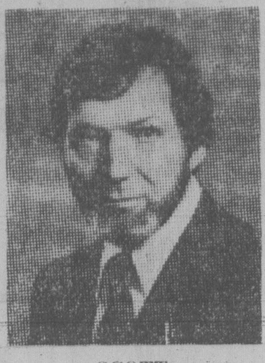
PERRY
. . . outgoing chief



SCOTT
. . . new president

Bill Scott, Victoria piano and organ businessman, has been elected to head the Victoria Chapter of the Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship for 1980. He succeeds Ross Perry, who becomes immediate past-president.

Scott, who is also an international director of the FGBMF, was elected at the businessmen's annual meeting in the Empress Hotel. Others elected were Herb Magee, secretary; Bruce Murray, treasurer, and the following to serve as executive: Phil Esnouf, Reid Wallberg, Clare Bergman, Dave Schellenberg, Ross Corby, Ike de Jong and Cedric Trueman.

The incoming president said he was excited about the future and told of his vision to get every member mobilized in reaching men for Christ. There are a lot of businessmen in trouble today, he said, and suggested that members offer to help anyone interested.

Scott spoke of plans to set up counselling teams to minister to men having marital and financial troubles, and, in addition, there would be teams for hospital visiting, intercessory prayer, assisting other chapters, and helping out in churches. Victoria, he felt, could be a model chapter for the rest of Canada.

The FGBMF has about 120 members in its Victoria Chapter, men from all walks of life and different denominations. Their purpose is to reach men everywhere for Jesus Christ; provide a basis of fellowship among men, to attract men of similar social, cultural, or business interests to chapter meetings and to share in testimony what God has done in men's lives.

Monthly chapter meetings, weekly luncheons, breakfasts, retreats and conventions are announced from time to time. For further information, telephone 386-4112 or 387-5657.

By RODERICK MANN
Los Angeles Times

Hollywood's much-in-demand new star Bo Derek is on her way to Europe to spend the Christmas holidays with her husband John and his second wife, Ursula Andress.

When she returns to start her next movie, A Change of Seasons, with Shirley MacLaine, she will get a chance to look at the new book which her stepdaughter, actress Sean Derek, has just written about John and his four beautiful wives.

Sean, an attractive young woman of 26, is actually three years older than Bo — which results in a raised eyebrow or two when she takes boyfriends home and announces: "This is my stepmother."

Derek

But they are good friends. And the book — called, at the moment, "From One Derek to Another" — should provide interesting reading for all those who cannot comprehend (1) how former actor Derek was able to land so many beauties and (2) having landed them, was able to turn them all into close friends.

For at Sean's 25th birthday party, not only was her mother Patricia there, with her father, but also Ursula and third wife Linda Evans and Bo.

Svengali, goes the cry. Rubbish, says Sean.

"The truth is all those women are individuals who happen to like each other," she says. "They're not clones, as people suggest. I've liked every one of my father's wives, but if I'm to be honest I think Bo is probably the best thing that's ever happened to him. For a start, she's actually more like him than any of the others.

"I've known her a long time. I remember taking her to have her teeth cleaned before she went off to make a film in Greece with my father and Linda. She was 15 then, or thereabouts. And at that time she wasn't interested in my father at all. Nobody in their right mind would hve suspected what was coming. When Linda returned from Greece and told me my father and Bo were in love it was a real shock.

"Now I realize how lucky I am. I've got this enormous family, thanks to his marriages. And they're all wonderful women, full of self-confidence. That's something my father instilled in us all, a feeling of self-worth.

"And the success of his relationships taught me something very important; if you love someone enough to be with them, then you've got to keep on loving them when you leave them. Otherwise it's nonsense."

The book, which she has just finished, was written with the full approval of her father, who sat down with her and talked for hours about his early career.

"He talked to me a lot about why he gave up acting," she says, "how he never felt comfortable being directed. And how, after Knock on Any Door, he was put into so much junk. What's fascinating is how much he seems to have in common with his own father, who was a director. He was married six times."

Playboy magazine is coming out in March with 12 pages devoted to Bo — the photographs, of course, all taken by John.

"I helped him with that session," says Sean. "My father always encouraged me to shoot pictures. When he did the layout on Ursula for Playboy I helped him; the same when he did the one on Linda. But I think the pictures of Bo are the most sensational yet. She's going to be a big star, you know; I knew that even before 10 came out."

Christmas sound for family

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Everybody has heard of the blues, but has anyone ever seen a tuba playing pink?

If you haven't, opportunity is around the corner. Take the family and go along to Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort, second floor, for one of the performances of Kaleidophonics, the second show in Kaleidoscope Theatre's family subscription series.

There are matinee and evening shows starting Boxing Day and going on to Dec.30.

It will be an adventure into sound as Kaleidophonics traces the history of music, with giant puppet notes and instruments. The Kaleidoscope cast will reveal how rhythm got started and demonstrate the highly improbable story of the birth of harmony.

And you'll learn everything you ever wanted to know and were too shy to ask, about those musical families, the Woodwinds and the Percussions.

The musical sounds will be coming from University of Victoria School of Music personnel with the visuals provided by Kaleidoscope actors under the imaginative direction of Liz Gorrie.

The Christmas show also explores the color and mood of sounds. White, for instance, is magical music and a unicorn, the moon, and a young girl are the visual properties Gorrie has chosen for this mood.

Properties and costume items are designed and executed by noted artist, Carole Sabiston.

While it's the third occasion that Kaleidophonics has been presented here, this is an all new version with a special section devoted to the sounds of Christmas.

Tickets and further information are available through Kaleidoscope office, 383-8124. Tickets may also be purchased at $3.50 for adults, $2.25 for children and senior citizens, at the Hillside Mall centre.

Singer's eyes shine Crystal blue

By JERRY PARKER
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — No matter how many times she has sung, Don't It Make My Brown Eyes Blue, Crystal Gayle's eyes are blue, and they always have been. They are nicely set off by her pink, perfect complexion and her dark, straight hair, which is so long she can sit on it.

She is prom-queen pretty, the kid sister of country music queen Loretta Lynn, already much celebrated for a lush, suffering soprano that has been a fixture of both the pop and country-music charts in recent years.

Gayle has had two big "crossover" hits, the Don't it. . . and You Been Talkin' in Your Sleep, torchy ballads that make up in emotion what the titles lack in grammar. She and Dolly Parton are the only female country stars to invade the pop charts successfully. It's something Loretta Lynn has never managed.

Having her own television special also puts Crystal one up on big sister Loretta, although both sisters scoff at any notion of sibling rivalry.

"I never think of us as being in competition," Gayle said while she was in New York putting finishing touches on her recent TV special. "No one can sing like my sister. Loretta is, well, she's just Loretta. She's a living legend." For her part, Lynn has said, "No one sings like Crystal, and no one is as pretty."

The sisterly sentiments were put to the acid test three years ago when both Lynn and Gayle were among the five nominees for the Country Music Association's Female Vocalist of the Year award. When the envelope was opened, revealing Gayle to be the winner, the irrepressible Lynn whooped, "That's my baby sister!"

"All evening long she'd been telling me, 'You're gonna get it. You're gonna get it,' " Gayle recalled. "Loretta had already won that award and almost every other one you could name. If she had to lose, I think she'd rather lose to me and keep it in the family."

Gayle was passing the afternoon in the very citified setting of photographer Francesco Scavullo's studio on Manhattan's East Side. Scavullo, noted for his ultra-glamorized Cosmopolitan magazine covers, photographed Gayle for her newest Columbia record album. To give television viewers an idea of how it is done, the sitting was re-created for the special.

The camera recorded Gayle as she sauntered down East 61st Street and entered Scavullo's town house. Several passers-by recognized the singer and asked for autographs, but many more New Yorkers with no notion of who she was were impressed by Gayle's petite beauty (she is 5 feet, 1 inch tall and weighs an official 101 pounds). And, of course, the hair. "What a head of hair she's got on her," a female onlooker observed, "I'd like to ask her how she takes care of it."

Later, in her suite at the Sherry-Netherland Hotel, Gayle washed the city grit from her hair, then spent an hour carefully combing out her Rapunzel-like tresses. "It's not just nervousness," she explained, "I really do have to do this." But she spent another hour twirling strands between her fingers and tucking them behind her ears.

Along with show-business success, Gayle shares with her big sister a coyness on the subject of age. Educated guesses place Gayle's age at 26 or 28, and Lynn is 16 or 18 years her senior. It is acknowledged that Lynn, who was married at 13 and a grandmother in her early 30s, was married and raising a family of her own before Gayle was born.

Kramer vs. Kramer, the story of a couple's divorce and subsequent battle for custody of their son, was named best picture of 1979 by the New York Film Critics Circle. Dustin Hoffman, who plays the part of the husband in the Robert Benton film, was chosen best actor.

Nobody upstages the man with the spiky moustache and the limp watches. Well, almost nobody. Salvador Dali failed to reckon with striking workers at Paris' George Pompidou Cultural Centre when he showed up with wife Gala to open an exposition of his work. He tried to open it anyway — and got thrown out when he tried to cross the picket line.

Singer Al Martino was arrested in a Framingham, Mass., department store and charged with trying to steal shirts and socks. Martino, 52, and a friend, Daniel DeJohn, 43, later pleaded innocent to shoplifting but a judge ordered the pair to stand trial anyway.

Debbie Harry, lead singer for the rock group Blondie, will be on the cover of the February issue of Penthouse magazine, marking only the second time — since Donna Summer — the publication has chosen a celebrity for a cover girl

Dali . . . union watch wasn't limp

MGM announced David Begelman, former Columbia Studio president involved in a cheque forging scandal last year, will become president of the company's film Frank Rosenfelt, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Inc., said Begelman's involvement with forging $40,000 in Columbia checks did not deter MGM from hiring him. "I have known David very closely for more than [illegible] years. I have never regarded (the forgery) as that of a criminal but rather that of a sick man."

Musician pals of Jerry Brown are busy rehearsing for this weekend's San Diego rock concert to benefit Brown's struggling presidential campaign. Jane Fonda, who celebrated her 43rd birthday Friday, will be co-hostess along with Helen Reddy.

Louise Brown already has fame. Now she's reaching for stardom in a television spectacular about her life — even though she hasn't yet lived quite two years of it. Louise was born in London — and into worldwide headlines — as the world's first "test tube" baby. She'll be the subject in the spring of a two-hour CBS-TV movie, produced by Carl Foreman from a script by Gillian Freeman, called A Miracle Named Louise.

Jerk's rating will irk Steve Martin fans

By LES WEDMAN

LOS ANGELES — One of the more grotesque tourist attractions in Beverly Hills is a mansion that 23-year-old Saudi Arabian sheikh, Mohammed Al Fassi bought last year for $2.4 million in cash.

It now will be seen by all those who go see Steve Martin in his first starring role in the comedy, The Jerk, directed by Carl Reiner, and opening throughout Canada and the U.S. for Christmas. In the U.S. it has an R — Restricted rating — which is going to keep out of the theatres the hundreds of thousands of teenage fans who've made Martin their white-haired idol.

The mansion the sheikh bought for his 19-year-old wife, Sheikha Dena, proved to be controversial long before The Jerk makers got permission to use it in their $5.5 million movie.

The new owners incurred the wrath of Beverly Hills' residents when they spent an estimated $2.5 million redecorating the house to their own unique taste. That included filling planters around the property with plastic flowers and painting hair and genitals on some of the statues on the verandah. Traffic screeched to a halt on Sunset Boulevard as sightseers slowed down to peek and crowds flocked to the mansion to gawk at the swank residence.

That was nothing compared to what the movie people found when they went into the house. They saw lime green, hot peach and ruby red rooms trimmed in gold and floral patterns that gave the place a petro-dollar version of Versailles. Velour paper, enamel murals and crystal scnonces covered the walls. Chandeliers rotated electronically. Viewers actually went slack-jawed when they discovered a fully-equipped disco, a dozen bathrooms and a completely-outfitted barber shop.

There was a copper bathtub in the shape of an opening shell, a zebra skin-covered revolving bed, a sauna with piped-in music and a life-sized, free-standing macrame camel in the living room. The cooler full of Chateau Lafite Rothschilde was a prop as was the paper cup dispenser of Waterford crystal.

Future of the house, now that the film is finished, is undecided because amid a blast of publicity and public outcry the offensive statues were pulled down, the Sheikha Dena returned to Saudi Arabia, followed by her husband — but not before he reportedly married an actress in a bar after lavishing on her $175,000 in clothes and jewellry.

Steve Martin helped write The Jerk, which is the story of nerdy Navin Johnson, adopted white son of a black sharecropper who accidentally becomes a millionaire overnight by inventing Opti Grabs, a device that keeps eyeglasses from slipping down noses. Then almost as quickly, he squanders his fortune, purchasing among other things that mindlessly opulent mansion already stocked with hangers-on.

New to kissing, Navin doesn't quite connect with Marie in The Jerk

The movie also stars Bernadette Peters as Martin's love interest — as she is in real life — comedian Jackie Mason, Bill Macy of Maude fame, and Maurice Evans, long gone from the Shakespeare stage. Mable King, Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee also are in it. And Bill Murray of Saturday Night Live and Meatballs, makes an appearance as a flamboyant, gay decorator who inspired the house decor.

Like the character he plays in the movie, Steve Martin is a millionaire, but it hasn't been easy. Last year he did more than 60 one-night performances at a minimum of $75,000 per show. He's sold five million albums. His King Tut single has sold 1.5 million. He got $500,000 for his screenplay from Universal Studios — it was originally titled Easy Money — and his company, Aspen Film Society, gets half the profits of the movie.

He also has bought a house in Beverly Hills, nothing as garish or lavish as the one in the movie. He gave his agent a Rolls Royce and his first book, Cruel Shoes, appears headed for bestseller status.

Says Martin, it would be absurd to think that he is going to keep on drawing 20,000 people a night for the next five years. And it's tough. It's really hard work, he acknowledges.

"I've fulfilled my dreams to the last inch as a standup comedian. I've made the statement I set out to make. I've done standup comedy, you know. In my head it's over as a form for me," he says.

Martin starred two years ago in an Oscar-winning short, The Absent-Minded Waiter, and had a cameo role in Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, but The Jerk is his big one.

"Now that I've a chance to do movies, that's where I'm going," he states. "I've had the thrill of going up fast. Now I'm in the position where I'm so ripe, there's such a backlash from the critics. One reviewer even said I represented the demise of American comedy. But I finished before they finished me."

Birds — cardinals, Canada geese, bluejays and sparrows — are the most popular subjects portraying wildlife, while kittens and puppies fill the domestic scene. Rustic views of hearth and home continue as a staple expressing Yuletide sentiment.

That, in brief, is a composite on trends in this year's Christmas greeting cards in the U.S., based on a survey among the 55 member companies of the National Association of Greeting Card Publishers.

Norman Halliday, executive vice-president of the publishers' association in Washington, D.C., believes the emphasis on children may relate to 1979 as the International Year of the Child, as declared by the United Nations.

"UNICEF proclaimed its celebration of universal childhood long before this calendar year," Halliday says.

"Besides, children are traditionally linked to the spirit of Christmas."

Within the industry, it is generally believed that greeting cards reflect current lifestyles, Halliday says. The children portrayed on this year's cards range from cherubic choir boys to assertive young angels who declare that "friends are presents we give ourselves."

Many greeting-card artists portray children in more subtle tones, Halliday notes. Some youngsters appear to have vaporized, wraith-like, from Dickens's A Christmas Carol. Others are rosy-cheeked in childhood innocence.

Martin Dash, a New York publisher, has a theory about the popularity of Christmas cards that show rustic farm scenes and steepled churches against snowy landscapes.

"These cards are purchased by many people in urban areas," Dash says. "Some are people who never lived in the country.

Transfer is no cute novelty act

By LEONARD FEATHER

For anyone who has been inclined to regard Manhattan Transfer as a cute novelty act, the group's latest LP (Extensions, Atlantic SD 19258) will be a revelation. In a concerted effort to achieve a more sophisticated image, the quartet has delivered its finest album to date, one in which at least two cuts (Birdland and Body and soul) rank among the most brilliant group vocal achievements of the past 10 years.

Central to the success of the quartet's new album are several vital contributors. Jey Graydon not only produced it, but also wrote some of the arrangements, played guitar and-or synthesizers on some tracks, and tossed in some additional vocal work on his own Twilight Tone (used in tandem with Bernard Hermann's old Twilight Zone TV theme).

The late Eddie Jefferson, to whom the album is dedicated, wrote the lyrics to the first chorus of Body and Soul, which he recorded himself many years ago. Jefferson, shot to death last May outside a Detroit club, was the first lyricist ever to set words to recorded jazz improvisations.

Body and Soul, in fact, uses none of the song's original words and virtually none of its melody, except for the first few bars. The Jefferson lyrics — as well as those in the second chorus on the MT version, which were written by arranger Phil Mattson — are based entirely on an ad lib tenor sax solo by the late Coleman Hawkins, recorded in 1939.

Birdland is a bird of another color. It is primarily a vocal version of the actual written melody by Joe Zawinul, for which Janis Siegel did a vocal arrangement so close to the original that the effect is stunning. Jon Hendricks, who wrote the lyrics, set words to just about everything on the original Weather Report record, including Zawinul's synthesizer solo toward the end.

Manhattan Transfer is proud of its new, hipper image, and particularly happy that Birdland is picking up AM airplay. The quarter is unanimous in its desire to retain and expand its quality format.

They've commissioned Phil Mattson to do a four part arrangement on the first Eddie Jefferson adaptation I ever heard, Moody's Mood for Love, based on the sax solo by James Moody.

"We plan, to do Horace Silver's Doodlin. Gene Puerling has done an arrangement of A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square for us to sing a cappella." (Puerling, leader-arranger for the Hi Los, arranged A Foreign Affair for the current album.)

"One of the ideas we're working with," Hauser added, is the concept of alternate dance music, instead of disco.

Star Trek — The Motion Picture

Film coathanger for effects

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Take away the razzle-dazzle hardware and what's left of Star Trek — The Motion Picture is not enough for a feature movie. The meagre plot serves as little more than a coathanger for about $40 million worth of special effects.

Most of the 79 episodes of Gene Roddenberry's television original were better content-wise than the movie spectacular — more creative, inventive and interesting. There are no alien encounters in this movie or interesting side trips to strange colonies tucked away on planets in another galaxy.

The crew spends most of its time in matching designer space outfits staring out from the bridge of the Enterprise into deep space with the appropriate expressions of horror or awe on their faces. Dialogue consists of little more than barked space-gargon commands by a grouchy Captain Kirk (a tanned and fit-looking William Shatner).

The theme is a familiar one to trekkies — perfect logic versus human emotion. Mr. Spock (Leonard Nimoy) is coaxed off the planet Vulcan by a strong telepathic compulsion that leads him to the Enterprise, recently redesigned and on its way to intercept a powerful energy-charged space craft heading straight for Earth and making everything in its path disappear.

Spock, gaunt and inscrutible, determines the operator of the alien ship is a highly evolved computor that has become almost human amassing the knowlege of the universe and is now bored and looking for a deeper meaning to life.

In an flimsy sequence of events more fiction than science, the ship's lieutenant is captured and turned into an efficient robot by the computor and then used to communicate with Kirk. The crew discovers the computor is a data-gathering Voyager probe sent off by the U.S. in the 20th Century and now peevishly looking for its creator on Earth to relay the information.

The climax of this movie is rather silly and not really a climax at all. Nothing exciting happens and the build-up — as the Enterprise is drawn into the bowels of the huge alien craft — is much too long.

Since there is very little action, director Robert Wise would have been better off concentrating on the tongue-in-cheek, campiness that flares up every now and then between the well-worn stars of the popular series. The good-natured banter is appealing but their isn't enough of it.

Kirk, now an admiral, returns to the helm because of the crisis, displacing new character Captain Decker (handsome, boyish Stephen Collins). An exotic bald-headed creature from the planet Delta (Persis Khambatta) has also been added to the cast and is the romantic interest for Collins.

Globe proposal is out of this world

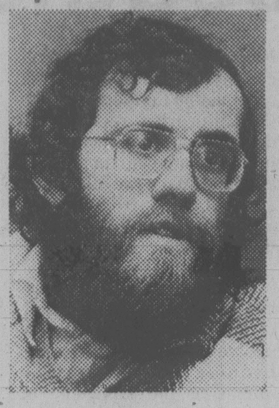
audrey johnson

It's my opinion that at this time we need a Globe Theatre replica and a distant copy of the Stratford Festival in Victoria, like we need to reproduce the Swiss Alps for scenery.

Such an idea would inevitably mean the laying out of money — and a lot of it. Do proponents of the concept recently outlined in connection with the Saanich-owned Maltwood property fully realize the end cost and the accompanying difficulties of what they propose?

Anyone reading the simplest signs and interpreting current trends will have no difficulty drawing a conclusion on the projected economic state of the arts in Canada 1980.

Many of the nation's finest arts bodies are now in deep trouble through no fault of their own. This includes the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, too many of our major symphonies and — incredibly — the Stratford Shakespeare Festival.



BOYCE
. . . not a first

It is not, in most cases, that consumer demand has dropped. In fact, quite the opposite.

The Vancouver Symphony has more than 40,000 paid subscribers and plays to houses of over 90 per cent capacity — yet its operation is well in the red.

Stratford, with steadily growing record crowds of more than a million per season — plus an operating surplus in 1978 of $400,000 — is threatened with having to close its spectacularly successful operation rather than carry on this season's $200,000 operating deficit.

General belt-tightening by grant-issuing government agencies is openly the basic malaise.

And for Christmas, this week the Canada Council has given it to us straight: No more bailing out of symphony orchestras that are deeply in debt. Complete suspension of funding of any new group or project.

The council, and other sources, have made it quite clear that existing performing arts organizations will not only be expected to tighten the belt themselves, but to get out and sweat in some energetic fund-raising.

Greater Victoria arts groups are in precisely the same situation as their brethren across Canada — holding the line while stretching and scrambling for the extra buck.

The Victoria Symphony Society is in the midst of a major fund drive; it must whittle its $200,000 carryover deficit or face being cut off by the Canada Council in 1981.

At the same time, the Conservatory of Music, although operating in the black, is faced with the need to launch its first big search for funds to equip its new home. How big a need? Try $250,000.

The Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, our pride and glory, is desperately underfinanced. It is energetically campaigning for funds.

Victoria International Festival, a proven success as a six-week highlight of summer, will be seeking additional funds; Belfry and Kaleidoscope Theatres have both embarked on an urgent search for needed dollars.

(There is ample established evidence that most of these organizations are as highly regarded among visitors as among citizens themselves.)

Add to this the probable need for funds to complete the up-dating and extension of the Royal Theatre — a keystone to our region's cultural facilities.

Initially it comes as a surprise, therefore, that Saanich Council would entertain — even provisionally — the concept of a "Globe" theatre and a Shakespeare festival for the Maltwood property.

Was it because the idea was the only imaginative one among a pedestrian lot of submissions?

On relative merit, it is imaginative if not innovative. The paucity of knowledge of this Pacific Northwest area on the part of proponent Conrad Boyce, is reflected in his statement that it would be the "first" replica of Shakespeare's 17th century London theatre. Not so. Ashland, Ore. has had a viable Globe type theatre as the centrepiece for its festival for years — and that's very near as the crow flies.

Could Boyce intend that his reproduction of Shakewould be more authentic? Hopefully not. If he is too literal, audiences, accustomed to the comfort of modern theatres will not be amused for long.

His reported comment that there is little for visitors to do here in the summer is dead wrong. The truth is that there is a great deal of entertainment over a considerable range and if Will Shakespeare is missing, the majority of our visitors would rather have Gilbert and Sullivan, Noel Coward or Neil Simon any day.

Unless — and this is the crux — Boyce and Saanich Council were able to emulate Tom Paterson and City of Stratford aldermen by going for a great man like Tyrone Guthrie to design and launch the festival. And at least a few "name" actors — say a John Neville and a Chris Plummer — to head the cast and bring in crowds.

The entertainment history of this region tells us that any project's initial two or three seasons are largely dependent on local audience support. And local audiences are traditionally cool to unknowns. Reputation is what spells success, from pops to Puccini and Stoppard to Shakespeare.

Santa comes to Canada

on snowshoes . . . or a turkey

From the Canadian Christmas Book, by Caroline Carver. Published by Tundra/Collins. $2.95.

Pat Barclay

THE HIDDEN MEANING: A Guide to Handwriting Analysis, by Hannah Milner Smith. Gray's Publishing. $7.95.

Hannah Milner Smith is quick to point out that the handwriting which appears on the cover of her new book is not her own. It matters, because Hannah Milner Smith is a graphologist, quite possibly "the leading graphologist in North America today," according to her sister, Vancouver's peppery ex-newspaper columnist, author and former Liberal MP, Simma Holt.

Hannah Milner Smith is the author of The Hidden Meaning: A Guide to Handwriting Analysis, much of which was published in 1970 under the title of Between the Lines: The Casebook of a Graphologist. The new book is a revised and updated version of the old. It is, says Hannah, "a much better book."

"I have established my credibility," she writes in her introduction. "I have appeared on national television and radio and had direct contact with listeners on talk shows. I have worked closely with doctors, psychiatrists and penitentiaries . . . I am now able to help more families and individuals as a result of the research I did on children in my 20 years of teaching . . . 'Psychographology is a term I like to use."

Hannah's interest in what she describes as "the science of graphology" began at age 16 in Vegreville, Alberta, where her parents owned a hotel. Intrigued by the many variations among the signatures on the hotel's guest register, she would question travellers in an efort to correlate personality traits with the idiosyncracies of their handwriting.

A few years later in a Detroit library she was "quite deflated" to discover a whole (admittedly dusty) shelf of books on the subject of graphology: "I really thought I'd invented it myself."

By 1940 the self-taught Hannah had begun working with U.S. military psychiatrists. "Graphology is a corroboratory tool supportive to psychology," she says.

"It's faster than psychoanalysis." Today she works with a B.C. psychiatrist who asserts she is "over 95 per cent accurate when it comes to isolating a problem area," and has assisted penitentiary officials, employers, a Calgary investigation bureau and a multitude of problem children, troubled adults, and engaged couples concerned about their compatibility. An unobtrusive note near the beginning of the book offers her address.

According to Hannah, a trained grapholgist can not only detect susceptibility to, or the influence of, alcohol and drugs, but can also determine signs of specific mental and physical weakness. Its potential for use in the prevention of suicide and crime could be very great, though "people in Canada are still living in the dark ages as far as graphology is concerned," she says disgustedly. "They still think it's magic."

The Hidden Meaning contains dozens of writing samples to illustrate Hannah's claims and a "very simplified guide" to the way in which letter formation is used to reveal personality. (Sample: "The 'g' which resembles the number nine and the 'y' a seven show that the writer has an aptitude for mathematics.") "Graphology has been called both an art and a science. It is definitely a science," warns Hannah, "but the art of interpretation is extremely important . . . always remember that A LITTLE LEARNING IS A DANGEROUS THING."

The remainder of the book describes a variety of human problems which Hannah's knowledge of graphology enabled her to solve. There was the mystery of the missing cash at the bank, for instance, and the teenager who was "terrified of exams" to the point of apparent unconsciousness. Suicide notes are analyzed, famous signatures exposed and the personnel problems of employers explored. And who could forget Hannah's account of the attractive divorcee who placed a classified ad in the "personal" column and asked her to help sift through the 60 replies!

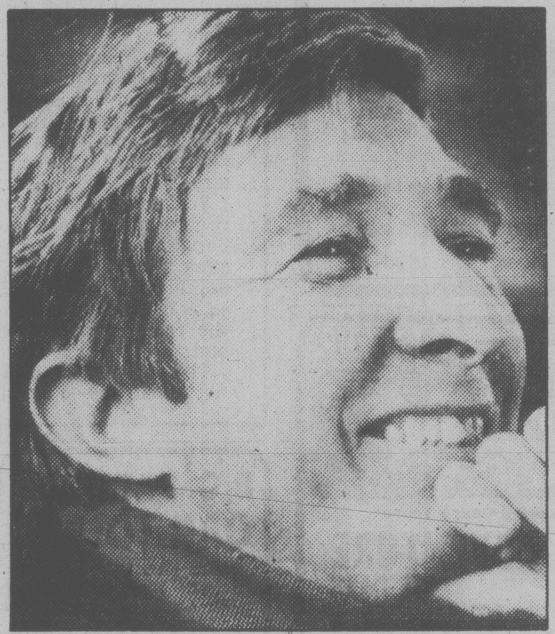
Hannah Milner Smith believes that school counselling should begin in Grade Four, "when writing has become a natural tool of self-expression and a part of the child." The many examples of children's writing which she uses to demonstrate the value of graphology are perhaps the most convincing aspect of her book.

For compulsive readability they are outshone, however, by her analyses of the handwriting of such luminaries as Princess Margaret, Pierre Trudeau and Richard Nixon. The book's most potent attraction is that it appeals to the irrepressible voyeur in us all.

Domestic chronicler

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

PROBLEMS AND OTHER STORIES, by John Updike. Random House. $12.50.



Updike . . . always a tenderness

Fraser keeps on returning to his ex-wife's house — formerly, of course, his house too. And his children's house. It still is: he lives alone in a tiny apartment in the city.

" 'Get away,' Jean said, to the cat, and with a flip of her foot sent the animal skidding across the linoleum. 'Nancy's spent the night with the Harrisons after a dance, and Kenny's out testing his new driver's licence. The other two are at college — but you know that, don't you?' "

" 'I pay their bills,' Fraser said."

John Updike continues:

"He must work out a different visitation pattern. Less might be more. But some need, in him or them, kept him coming, over and over. The scene of his crime."

And:

"The unspoken ground note of all his conversations with his children was Fraser's request for forgiveness."

Then, after a visit to his lover, who is fighting with her ex-husband over money and with her son over power, Fraser sees the fires burning on the railway to keep the switch-points from freezing:

The truth of the situation depicted in this story negates the seeming irony of the story's title; domestic life in America and elsewhere is obviously not what it used to be. With a lesser writer, unattached to his or her characters — to reality, in fact — the irony might be all. Cheap jabs would follow, comfortable sneers. But John Updike, in this story and in others in Problems, is engaged. He always has been, and he's always been the best American writer of the domestic life — a life which still holds most of us, for better or for worse.

Although it might be said of some of the characters in these stories that they crouch "within (their lives) as within a fragile shell," these people are out: their lives may indeed be fragile, but they, willingly or unwillingly, are not.

Culp meets his daughters in Nevada, where he is being divorced. Some sort of brief domesticity is re-established.

The Mapels — father, mother and children — meet around the supper table and discuss their impending separation. Breakdown and violence occur.

Again the Maples, later, journey to court and are formally disunited:

"Obsolete at their own ceremony, the Maples stepped back . . . and stood side by side, uncertain of how to turn, until he at last remembered what to do; he kissed her."

The tenderness that suffuses "Here Comes The Maples" is an essential ingredient of all — or nearly all — of the stories in Problems. Where it is absent - as in "Ethiopia", "Problems" or "Transaction" (a softcore, or literarily pornograhic story printed in Qui magazine; grotesque, but not without effect), we are aware of the author's skill, but aware too of his disinterest. Our own disinterest emerges then, and we feel that this collection would be richer, though slimmer, without these stories.

But tenderness will have its way. Love, even, though these characters may not always know it, makes new blossoms in deserts, along railway lines in suburbs and in cities.

Man and wild creatures living together

By HAROLD HOSFORD

FLY HIGH, RUN FREE, by Jane Ratcliffe. Clarke, Irwin. $20.95.

THE BIRDS OF PARADISE, by Michael Everett. Academic Press. $29.25.

THE YEAR OF THE GREYLAG GOOSE, by Konrad Lorenz. Academic Press. $32.50.

If it hasn't already been said, then it's time it was: Books are a window on the world. For example, in the pages of the above three books, you can tramp the moors of northern England, bask in the sunny valley of the Alm in Austria, or struggle through the humid, mountain jungles of New Guinea in less time than it takes to say so. And in these cases the imaginary journey is all in the interests of understanding and appreciating wild things.

In Fly High, Run Free, Jane Ratcliffe tells her own story — set in Cumbria in the north of England — of a life of dedication to wild animals, particularly sick and injured wild animals. It is also a story of her remarkable successes nursing such unfortunate casualties as badgers, foxes, barn owls, kestrels, and hedgehogs back to health. More importantly, it is a story of rehabilitation, of almost teaching — at least of retraining — these animals to fend for themselves so that, once again free, they could live full and productive lives. And that is the point of Jane Ratcliffe's story — that every injured animal coming to her, would once again fly high or run free.

In Michael Everett's The Birds of Paradise, you are taken to the jungles of New Guinea and northern Australia to see what are, unquestionably, some of the most beautiful — and, at the same time, bizarre — birds in the world, the birds of paradise and the bower birds.

These mysterious birds have been known to western man for more than 2,000 years, since their gorgeous plumes are believed to have reached Europe via the trade routes across southeastern Asia and the Middle East. Despite this long association, the lives of the strange birds that wore the feathers — remained a mystery. Even today, nearly [illegible] after the first species was described by scientists, at least one species is known only from its feathers; it has never been seen alive by scientists.

Everett's The Birds of Paradise not only lifts the curtain of mystery that surrounds these birds but also provides us with a new opportunity to see the magnificent color engravings with which artists of the last century introduced the birds of paradise and the bowerbirds to an awestruck world. These engravings, by John Gould — England's Audubon — W. Hart and J. G. Keulemans, first appeared in R. Bowdler Sharp's Birds of Paradise nearly a century ago. For Everett's book they have been supplemented with modern paintings by Peter Hayman, paintings of species that were unknown in Sharp's day.

The result is a spectacle of beauty that is certain to bring joy to the heart of anyone with a feeling for the wondrous creations of nature.

It is beauty, too, that takes you to the story-book valley of the Alm in the mountains of Austria. There, in Konrad Lorenz's The Year of the Greylag Goose, you follow the joy — and a little of the despair — that can be the annual fare of the Greylag Goose, probably Europe's best-known goose and ancestor of the great grey barnyard geese we all know so well.

Konrad Lorenz is a scientist with an international reputation for his studies in animal behavior — his King Solomon's Ring is a classic in such work — but The Year of the Greylag Goose is not a scientific book, at least not in the sense that it is a dry, emotionless dissertation. As a matter of fact, with frequent use of words like love, marriage, and jealousy to describe the actions and emotions of the birds, scientists might find much to criticize in the book. But, to those of you who can enjoy a good story — and Lorenz tells a good story — and, above all, magnificent artistry with the camera, The Year of the Greylag Goose will be a delightful experience.

The visual success of the book owes much to Sybille and Klaus Kalas, whose color photographs add an element to the story that Lorenz's words, sensitive and revealing as they are, can not. Touching on nearly every aspect of the lives of these beautiful birds, the pictures alone could tell the story of the geese. Through them you see the geese at rest, at play, courting, fighting, at home on their nests and with their young, and, best of all, with their human associates. This last, perhaps the most telling point of the book, shows that men and wild things can live together, at little cost to either.

In Sochi you can vouch for the rest

By DAVID K. WILLIS

SOCHI, U.S.S.R.--Igor positively radiated health and good cheer as he stood in a blue and white tracksuit and brown sandals chatting on the stairs of his spacious sanatorium in the Soviet Union's most famous resort city.

He said he had paid 48 rubles (about $74) for the right to spend 24 days in the sun, sharing a room with two other men. ("You feel better when you have company.")

That was 30 per cent of the total cost of the vacation, he went on. The rest was made up by his trade union.

He was an administrator in a metal factory in Kursak, south of Moscow. Metal workers and those in other difficult professions such as coal miners, oil and gas drillers and prospectors in Siberia, are said to have priority here.

He had nothing but praise for the food and the staff of the Metallurg sanatorium, built in 1956 to hold 350 guests. He liked the programmed days of exercise, mineral spa baths, swimming and rest.

In fact, Igor presented to the world the kind of tanned, healthy, satisfied face that Communist Party officials here are proudest of.

In all, officials here say 3.5 million people, including 200,000 from abroad, flock each year to this tree-filled city and resort area that meanders for 90 miles along the Black Sea coastline.

They fan out among Sochi's 240 sanatoriums and hotels, usually for three weeks at a time. The very name "Sochi" is a byword for rest and recreation, Soviet style. It is largely controlled by the Soviet trade-union movement.

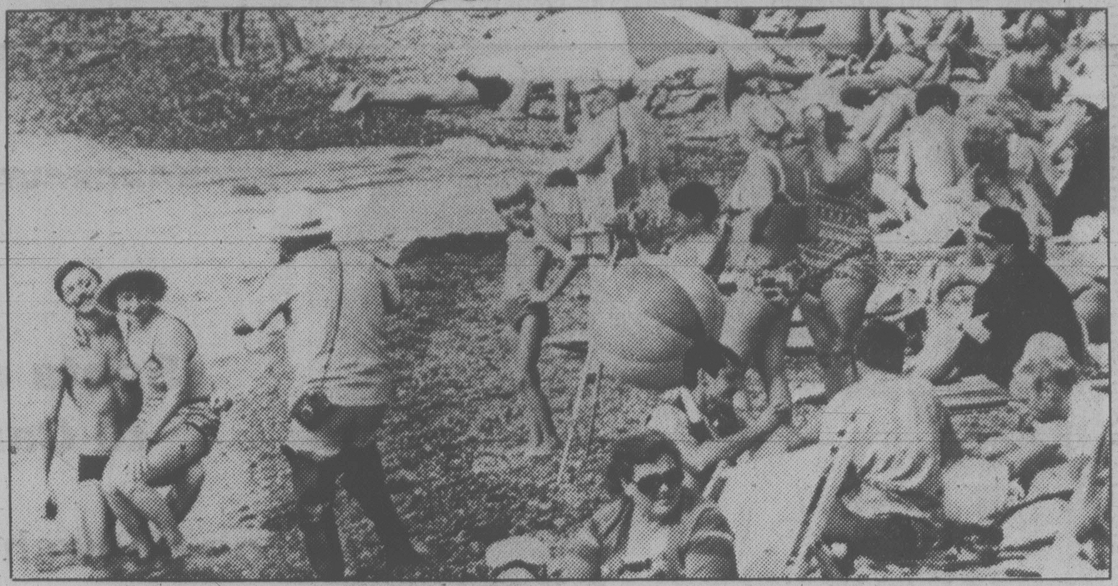
The city has a more relaxed air than other grayer, colder Soviet cities.

Yet Sochi has plenty of problems as well, mirroring many that beset the Soviet resort industry as a whole.

For a start, the city can accommodate only a fraction of the people who want to come here each year. "There is a shortage of trade-union vouchers (which guarantee room and board either free of charge or at 30 per cent of cost)," said Valentin Kibzun, chairman of the Sochi territorial council for managing health resorts.

Only one-third of guests here have the precious vouchers.

Noted sociologist Viktor Perevedentsev cited a survey two years ago that showed only 21 million people were able to go on organized vacations in 1975—about 8 per cent of the population of 250 million then.



Popular Sochi beaches aren't sandy and are ravaged by the Black Sea

The entire Soviet resort system, centrally planned and organized, is geared for individual workers. Husbands go with their fellow workers, wives with theirs and children to Pioneer (Young Communist) camps.

But more and more people want to go as a family unit, officials report. This is considered good, since it could strengthen the family against a rising tide of Soviet divorce.

Yet individual families suffer in several ways. Prices are much higher when they travel outside a group. Often, hotels and resorts simply turn them away. Advance reservations are almost impossible to make.

Such resorts are operated by the so-called "fourth departments" of party central committees—national, regional and local. These are the committee departments in charge of health care and resorts. Passes are freely available.

Meanwhile, Sochi itself battles several other problems.

Talking to our group, Sochi's deputy mayor, Yevgeni Lyashenko, echoed another Gavrilenko concern: The Black Sea relentlessly batters the Sochi shore, which is entirely gravel and has no sand.

Sochi also has only one main road and rail route creating enormous holdups in late August when people stream home.

Something dodgy in Manila

AROUND the WORLD with STAN DELAPLANE

MANILA— The jeepney minibus is painted in psychedelic swirls of orange and red. Blue, gold and violent purples. Its hood is decorated with a half dozen shining mirrors. Three silvered prancing horses, each about a foot high, are lined up across the front.

You mount them from the back and sit on benches facing each other. Three to each side. Sometimes the driver squeezes two more into the front seat beside him.

The cost for the first five kilometres—a dozen blocks —is 50 centavos. Seven cents U.S.

There are hundreds of them serving 10 million people of Manila and the suburbs.

Though there's been some talk of replacing them with more sedate buses. But it's as unlikely as San Francisco giving up its cable cars.

Even the President's wife has backed away from the jeepney. (She is titled Governor of Metro Manila.) Practically rebuilt the raunchy old town into a shining city of skyscrapers and elegant, modern hotels.

A powerhouse—(the newspapers refer to them as "The First Couple.") She makes Rosalynn Carter look like a pussy cat.

There are 14 deluxe hotels in the new Manila. All are guarded like Fort Knox.

Private guards.

Dressed in military gray trousers. Short-sleeve shirts. A gold badge over the breast pocket shows their authority. They don't carry guns, but a short black baton is looped into the broad black military belt around their waists.

At the new Peninsula, they run the elevators. A pair are on the floor near my room. There are several at the car entrance. A few more in the lobby.

My driver said: "It is so they can judge who is going upstairs. Or into the hotel, sir. I cannot walk into a hotel without being stopped. Because I do not look like a guest."

Condominium complexes springing up around Manila have guard posts at the entrance screening each incoming car. It feels like entering a restricted army post.

Manila newspapers don't reflect a great deal of crime. There are not many police on the streets—fewer than most of our cities. But the gray-uniformed guards stand at all places where money might be attractively easier to get.

It's a lively city. At its best on Sunday. The markets are crowded. The traffic is bumper to bumper. Though gasoline costs $1.75 U.S. a gallon. (The minimum daily wage is exactly the same amount.)

My driver named Rowan drives for the Peninsula. "They do not like you to take taxis, sir. No, sir, not because of crime. But you don't know Manila and the driver might make monkeyshines. Take you the long way."

If you do take a taxi, the doorman gets the driver's name and number. He writes down YOUR name, hotel room and where you are going.

A hotel doorman said: "That is in case you leave something in your cab, we can get it back, sir."

It all had a dodgy ring about it. The prowling guards. The recording of your name. The cab number. Your destination.

Milford Sound—beauty spot worth seeing in all its dimensions

Prettier than the postcards

By BARBARA HORNGREN

AUCKLAND, N.Z.—To say New Zealand is picture-postcard pretty is to do it an injustice. No place ever is as postcards would try to make you think it is—especially not New Zealand. It is a country that can't be appreciated fully in one dimension.

In fact, if there ever were a country that gave a sense of the never-ending depth, width and height of multidimensions, it is this one. Here you'll find alps and fjords and a cave where millions of tiny glowworms create a subterranean Milky Way.

There are cities that will remind you of San Francisco and Canterbury. And cities that won't remind you of others at all. But best of all, there is that patchwork landscape of vivid greens, outlined by hedgerows and tufted with beige—white sheep.

There are just three million people in New Zealand, but there are 60 million sheep.

NEW ZEALAND, SOME 7,000 miles southwest of California, is composed of two main land masses—South Island, home to about one-third of the population and such scenic wonders as Mt. Cook, the Southern Alps and Milford Sound; and North Island.

The latter holds more than half of the population, various volcanoes, the country's capital, Wellington, and its largest city Auckland.

Auckland, sprawls close to the northern end of the North Island. It is here that many New Zealand holidays begin, for Air New Zealand flies into Auckland, as does Continental. Los Angeles is the main U.S. gateway.

Auckland has little grime and crime. Instead, you'll find a couple of picturesque harbors and a heavy complement of sailboats. Sugar-sand beaches, parks and gardens set off the Victorian architecture.

In Auckland you can golf, go to the races, sail, shop, visit the zoo or the museums—the Museum of Transport and Technology, for instance, or the War Memorial Museum in the Auckland domain. Here is an extensive collection of Maori artifacts, including native canoes of the South Pacific.

THE MAORIS ARE BELIEVED to have settled in New Zealand in the 14th century. Most historians think they came from South America. When one speaks of native New Zealanders, it is the Maoris to whom he refers.

Today, Maoris make up only about seven per cent of the country's population. About 90 of every 100 persons here are descended from people who came from England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland; the rest are of European descent.

The Maoris called New Zealand Aotearoa—the Long White Cloud. You get a sense of why when you visit Rotorua, about 150 miles south and east of Auckland.

Rotorua is billed as "nature's grandest thermal showcase." The countryside here always seems to be bathed in puffs of steamy cloud.

Between Auckland and Rotorua are the Waitomo Caves, where you can see the glowworms and limestone formations. And just 280 miles south of Rotorua is Wellington.

WELLINGTON WILL REMIND YOU of San Francisco, no little because it has cable cars and Victorian style houses angled on hillsides above the sea.

In Wellington, too, you should visit the Botanic Gardens, a 62-acre domain including a begonia house and Lady Norwood Rose Gardens.

Like the English, New Zealanders are mad for gardens. Probably the best example of this is Christchurch, the main city on the South Island; most houses are surrounded by flowers. Most public buildings, too.

Christchurch is said to be the most English city outside of England. It resembles Canterbury because it was founded by pilgrims from that area of England. The plains surrounding Christchurch today are called Canterbury Plains. And besides the gardens, you'll find the Avon River here, red buses, schoolboys and girls in uniform—and a large Gothic cathedral dominating the centre of town.

FROM CHRISTCHURCH YOU CAN explore in several directions; all of them lead to a natural wonderland. For instance, it's a quick flight on Mt. Cook Airlines to Mt. Cook, the highest of New Zealand's mountains. You fly through the Southern Alps in circumstances rarely encountered in planes today: The pilot invites you to the cockpit and points out specific peaks as you gaze at the 180-degree panorama to be seen from his windows.

Mt. Cook Airlines is a principal "intra" New Zealand carrier. With a fleet of turbo props and small Cessna ski and float and wheel planes, they will put you into downdrafts and updrafts until you feel drafty—and downright daft.

That's certainly how you feel flying through the turbulent air of the Southern Alps in one of the smaller planes. You're sure you can reach out and touch them; and you feel you're on a roller-coaster ride gone haywire. You sideslip through the skies, then plunge downward; before your stomach has time to catch up with the rest of you, you're on your way back up to meet it.

BUT THE VIEWS ARE WORTH the flights: From tiny Mt. Cook Airport you take a five-passenger ski plane to Tasman Glacier, where you land on the snowfield (the skies roll down over the plane's wheels). From Mt. Cook to Queenstown, the charming resort city in the Southern Alps. And from Queenstown south to Milford Sound and the fjords in a nine-passenger Cessna.

It's Milford Sound that you often see on posters advertising travel to New Zealand. In them, the waters are a rich, cobalt blue and so clear that they mirror perfectly Mitre Peak and the cotton-batten clouds that halo it.

Many changes for Humph in 33 years

Humphry Davy, a Times reporter who began his newspaper career in pre-war Quebec called it quits Friday after more than 33 years on our staff.

Humph, 65, was born in Montreal of English-French parents and was educated in Quebec City, where he began work with the English-language Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph during the regime of Premier Maurice Duplessis.

He worked subsequently for the Sherbrooke Record, then in the St. Lawrence River dredging industry before joining the Royal Canadian Air Force with the outbreak of war in 1939.

Davy served three years in England with the public relations section of No. 6 Bomber Command at Allerton Park, and on returning to Montreal in 1945 joined British United Press wire service, with which he worked briefly in the National Press Gallery before coming to the Times.

His work has frequently involved native Indians, ethnic minorities, parks and recreation development and environmental protection, in which he took a personal interest.

Davy and video terminal have parted

By HUMPHRY DAVY

Newspapers and newspaper people have certainly changed since the early '30s when I started my career with the Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph.

We sat on hard, wooden chairs, tapped out our stories on old battered typewriters and were paid a pittance.

Now you no longer hear the click and the clack of those battered old Underwoods and today's young journalist writes on an almost soundless video terminal.

Pay and working conditions have improved and journalists are professionals in the best sense of the word.

But back when I started it was a totally different world. Most newspapers belonged to individual families with distinct political leanings — and that meant a Liberal or Conservative bias.

In many cases, stories had to reflect that bias.

Newspapermen were certainly different, perhaps due to the classical education of the period.

I'm not exaggerating when I say they knew more history and literature than most first-year university students today. And it wasn't unusual for an editor to encourage a young reporter to read good literature and history.

But newspapermen on the whole led a somewhat bohemian life.

They tended to drink more than was good for them and drifted nomad-like from city to city, rarely settling down in one place.

They kept late hours, gathering at their favorite pub or restaurant where they drank and conducted endless discussions on everything from politics to the poetry of Lord Byron.

My family was horrifed to learn that I had chosen to become a newspaperman.

They wanted me join something solid like Royal Trust or the Imperial Bank of Commerce.

Newsmen? Ah yes, they were a free-and-easy crowd, capable of partying all night and arriving at the office the new morning attired in a tuxedo to put in a day's work.

It was a different world in more ways than one.

I remember one friend who covered the Manchurian war and was thrown into jail by the Japanese. When he informed them he was a British subject, he was not only released but treated with kid gloves.

And that wasn't unusual in a time when Brittania ruled the waves and the world was an English-speaking reporter's oyster.

But those years, of course, were the years of the Great Depression, a time of great change and unrest.

But I must add if the newspaper world is different today, some things remain the same.

While newspaper people may not be the big drinkers their counterparts were in the '30s, they are still basically the same.

They are still loyal to each other, friendly, tolerant and understanding.

And they still conscientiously report events as they see them.

And after all, isn't that all that matters?

DINING SUITES
Dine in style over the holidays by giving yourself a present that will last and increase in value as years go by. Rather than just spending money this Christmas invest it in one of our magnificent mahogany and walnut 8-10 piece dining suites from the turn of the century through the 1930's. Superbly crafted in solid wood, no pressed sawdust here. Our truck was in an accident on the way back from New York and Penn. so there is slight freight damage. Open 7 days, most nights, only 15 min. from town, Petes Place, 786 Goldstream, 478-6000. Financing avail. OAC.

Today is the winter solstice, the shortest day of the year.

Once upon a time, long before the birth of Christ, before the Roman and Greek empires, back to the time of the Sun-worshippers, it was a day of prayer, followed a few days later with a great feast.

It wasn't known as Christmas, for it was the Feast of Returning Life that followed the winter solstice.

Today we accept the shortest day as a matter of course. We plan for the extra hours of daylight as if they were inevitable. But not so with the Sun-worshippers.

As the season progressed they saw the sun moving closer to the horizon, and fear gripped their hearts lest it sink beyond and never return.

Only too well did they know that the sun made possible all forms of life on this planet. Without it life would cease.

So the priests and the people gathered at the great temple, fervently praying their sun-god would not forsake them.

The shadow of this spire stretched along the ground, decreasing in length, increasing in length, through the year, its extremity marked by the high priest each day at noon.

As it approached its greatest length the masses watched and prayed until the high priest announced a shortening of the shadow by a fraction.

The sun was returning. New life would flow in humans, animals and plants. Truly a cause for great celebration.

And celebrate they did, the great feast to the sun-god, the joy and merrymaking lasting several days.

The Greeks made it the feast to the most perfect body, and it included beauty contests as we would call them today, and sports events.

The Romans, a war-like nation, called it the feast of the greatest warrior. Here, again, prowess, not in sport but in the handling of weapons, won the laurels.

In the fourth century AD it was changed to Cristes Maesse, or Christ's Mass, an annual festival to commemorate the birth of Christ.

Thus we lost the true Feast of Returning Life, and as knowledge replaces superstition the shortest day becomes just a part of the seasonal changes.

Also lost to many was the realization that plants, animals and humans are totally dependant on the sun for their survival.

In the words of M. O. Forster, as given in the presidential address to the chemical section of The British Association:

"The majority of educated people have no real conception of the sun's contribution to their existence."

And that is the story of the origination of Christmas, at least the way it was told to me.

Whatever festival you celebrate next week, may it be one of joy, and include thanks for the sun that makes life possible.

THE TENTH ACM COMPUTER CHESS CHAMPIONSHIP

Recently I was an honored guest at the Tenth Annual Association for Computing Machinery (ACM) Chess Championship of Northern America in Detroit, and was amazed at the great advances chess-playing computers have made.

The whole idea of the computer championship was conceived by Dr. Montzoe Newborn of Montreal's McGill University, Dr. Ben Mittman of Northwestern and David Levy of London, an International Chess Master and a long-time contestant against the ever-stronger computers.

Max Euwe, ex-World Champion and ex-FIDE president, attended, too, and both he and I showed positions, told stories, and answered questions all during the battle of the great machines.

Noise? That certainly is one place the computers have it over us. You can't bother them. Actually most of them aren't even on the scene, being hundreds of miles away from the battlefield. In a regular over-the-board tournament, of course, even dropping of a pin could almost get you thrown out of the playing hall. Twelve computers were entered of which three were semi- or small computers that answered right on the scene — the others had to be fed by telephone. That wasn't cheap! In this one event in Detroit, over [illegible] dollars was spent on telephone calls alone.

Chess 4.9, of Northwestern University, run by David Slate and Lawrence Atkin, was by far the the best in the field. I saw it announce a mate in five, and in another game make a beautiful combination, sacrificing a Knight and following it up with a quiet move. Yes, these machines do have great potential strength and in ten years or less, we may see a battle for the world title between a computer and the world champion player!

It was a four-round Swiss event, directed by Levy. Chess 4.9 came in first with 3½, only drawing in the final round against Belle, winner of last year's event. Belle, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, played badly against a micro-computer, Sargon II, by Dan and Kathe Spracklen of San Diego, but still won the game and tied for second place with Duchess of Duke University, run by Tom Truscott, Bruce Wright and Eric Jensen. Then both scored 3 points.

In 1980, the International Computer Chess Association will hold its World Championship for Computers in either Australia or Germany. In 1981, they may have an Open World Championship on the West Coast, most likely in San Francisco. Here are two games showing the computer's growing sophistication over the past decade. First, a game played in the first U.S. championship in New York, 1970.

Crown counsel Richard Law told Judge Harold Alder the incident occurred Oct. 11 at 4:30 a.m.

A woman called Victoria police complaining about a naked man on her porch at 1455 Edgeware. She said Kelly's blue jeans and boots were on the porch and Kelly was trying to open the screen door.

Defence lawyer Lawrence Johnson said his client was an engineer on a fishing vessel and was drunk on the night in question. Johnson said Kelly was at a party next door, had no idea of what he was doing there, and didn't know the victim.

Kelly added that he had hit his head on the cement prior to that and was knocked out. He said some friends took his shirt off and put him to bed and that the next thing he remembered was being on the porch.

Marcel Victor Poupart, of 2065 Goldsmith, is charged with the $6,193 armed holdup Dec. 5 of the Saanich Peninsula Savings and Credit Union, at 7103 West Saanich in Central Saanich, and use of a firearm during a robbery.

Following an application for bail review in Victoria County Court before Judge Peter Millward by defence lawyer Barry Mah Ming, Poupart was ordered released in his own recognizance in the sum of $5,000, with one surety in that amount.

Terrance Dale Erickson, of 2326 Orchard, changed his pleas to guilty to impaired driving and refusing a breath test demand.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Erickson sped out of a gas station in Sidney at about 4:30 p.m., Sept. 3 after giving the attendant $2 for $3 worth of gas and saying he would be back later with the dollar.

He was stopped by Sidney RCMP after he made a u-turn shortly after leaving the gas station and initially gave officers a false name, Laughton said.

Then, while being escorted to the police vehicle for transport back to the RCMP detachment, he bolted away from the officers. Police got Erickson's correct name and address from papers in his vehicle and arrested him about five hours later at a Sidney drinking establishment. At that time, Laughton added, Erickson had shaved off his moustache.

Erickson had previous convictions for impaired driving May, 1973, in Kitimat, and July, 1975, in Alberta, when he was fined $250 and $300, respectively.

Defence lawyer James Robertson said Erickson was a student at the University of Calgary until October, when he had to quit because of finances.

Green imposed concurrent terms of five days and one day after learning that Erickson could be released by Christmas day.

EATON'S

The Gift of Giving

To see the light of joy in the eyes of another says more about the spirit of Christmas than any other gift. At Eaton's we believe in the gift of giving. That's why it's become a Christmas tradition for us to deliver poinsettias to many of the Rest Homes in our city. With the help of the Boy Scouts, through the facilities of the Rotary Club of Victoria, we bring a little of the joy of Christmas to those who might feel alone or forgotten. It's our way of saying we care and of sharing Eaton's promise for a merrier Christmas. To all our customers we extend our wishes for a Merry Christmas, and our hope that the gift of giving will be yours this holiday season.
